SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 4, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we bless Thee that Thou hast brought us in safety and peace and honor to the beginning of a new year. Through the most tragic year of the world's history Thou hast brought us safely. No promise of Thine has been forgotten; no plan of the Divine mind has been changed. Thy Word standeth sure.

We bless Thee that Thou hast kept alive the conscience of the world, and that no expedient of peril, no change of circumstance has been enabled to drown the simple appeal of humanity. We thank Thee that Thou hast quickened the sympathies of the world bound together by universal ties of pain. Thou hast brought us in sight of the larger and nobler vision of a united brotherhood of the race. Carry on Thy great plan for the accomplishment of the Divine will. We ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

HOUSE OF DELEGATES, PORTO RICO.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

As resolved by the House of Delegates of Porto Rico, I have the honor to place before the President and the Congress of the United States the following resolution passed by the house at its session of March 9, 1915:

"House resolution requesting the President and the Congress of the United States to establish a democratic government in the island.

"Whereas the people of Porto Rico have fully shown their capacity for self-government;

"Whereas the subsistence for a longer period of the provisional government created by the Foraker Act is intolerable and it is of strict justice that Congress should substitute our present form of government, wherein the executive power pertaining to the heads of departments as such is confounded with the legislative power which they exercise as members, by virtue of law, of the upper house for a system essentially democratic: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates of Porto Rico, To request of the President and the Congress of the United States:

"That it provide Porto Rico with an organic act constituting in the island a republican form of government in harmony with the democratic traditions of the people of the United States and the culture and progress of the people of Porto Rico, the same to be on the following bases:

"(a) Establishment in the constitution of Porto Rico of the constitutional restrictions of section 10, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, and amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 13, and 15 of said Constitution.

"(b) Two legislative houses wholly elective.

"(c) Veto of the governor as it exists at present.

"(d) The power of the insular legislature in all local matters.

"(e) Exclusive jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico or of any of the judges thereof on delegation of the court in all matters within the jurisdiction of district and circuit courts of the United States.

"(f) Provision that all appropriation and revenue acts shall originate in the lower house.

"(g) The cession to Porto Rico of its customs receipts and the non-application to the island of the internal-revenue laws of the United States.

"(h) Granting of franchises and privileges by the insular senate with the approval of the governor or by a commission designated in the following manner: Three members of the lower house, the minority to be represented; three members of the upper house, the minority also to be represented; and three heads of departments designated by the governor.

"(i) Appointments of the heads of departments by the governor, with the approval of the insular senate, for a term of four years.

"(j) Incompatibility of legislative duties with incumbence of any other remunerative office, or of an office wherein jurisdiction is exercised, members of both houses to be prohibited from accepting any remunerative office during the term for which they may have been elected.

"(k) Restriction of public credit in accordance with the assessed valuation of taxable property.

"(l) Persons who are not bona fide residents of the island to be prohibited from holding public office."

As speaker of the house and simple executor of the resolutions thereof, I should not comment on the foregoing resolution, but, to give the contents of the same greater force, I will state that it was passed by all the delegates representing the political parties. "Unión de Puerto Rico" and "Partido Republicano," who obtained the largest number of votes at the last general elections, and who compose almost the whole of Porto Rican opinion. I must also state that the only delegate who voted against said resolution declared that he belonged to neither of the parties having representation in the house of delegates.

Very respectfully,

JOSÉ DIEGO,
Speaker of the House of Delegates of Porto Rico.

ESTIMATES OF RICE PRODUCTION.

Mr. ROBINSON. I present a memorial of the Southern Rice Growers' Association, showing that the departmental estimates of rice production in the United States is excessive and asking for a recanvass of these estimates. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STUTTGART, ARK., December 18, 1915.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Southern Rice Growers' Association will furnish data proving only 86,000 acres in Arkansas, only 714,894 bags; Honduras, 80,475 bags; Japan, 262,971 bags blue rose; total for Arkansas, 1,058,340, their report. And actual count—not an estimate—shows Government report for Arkansas 152,285 bags excessive.

STUTTGART RICE MILL CO.

CARLISLE RICE MILL CO.,
Carlisle, Ark., December 18, 1915.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am very much gratified to receive your telegram, advising that you had conferred with the Department of Agriculture with reference to the recent report issued covering rice production, detailing this production as to Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, and California, and requesting me to forward you data in support of our protest in this matter.

I am inclosing you herewith a concise comparative statement covering the production of rice in the United States this year, as shown in estimate of the Government, The Rice Millers' Association, and the Southern Rice Growers' Association, and in addition to this I am inclosing you herewith an exact copy of detailed report of both of these organizations as received by me. I have also communicated with the president and the secretary of the Rice Millers' Association, requesting that they send you their complete records in this matter, and have made a like request of the general manager of the Southern Rice Growers' Association.

By referring to the comparative statement inclosed you will see that the apparent error on the part of the Department of Agriculture is in calculating the yield per acre principally in the States of Louisiana and Texas, although they show a slightly higher yield per acre for Arkansas than the reliable information we have at hand seems to indicate. It is quite apparent to me, and also to many other well-informed rice operators in Louisiana and Texas with whom I have communicated, that the Department of Agriculture has not given due consideration to the damage sustained to the crop of rice in the coastal country, as result of two very severe storms. The Rice Millers' Association and the Rice Farmers' Association estimates were compiled after the last of these storms, after a complete and very accurate survey of the entire producing area had been made.

Trusting very much, that with the information herewith inclosed, together with that which will be supplied to you from Beaumont, Tex., you will have all the data necessary to lay before the Department of Agriculture, of such nature as to require them to make an immediate recanvass of the production of rice this year, and thanking you very much for your prompt attention in this matter, I am,

Yours, very truly,

E. B. ROY, Secretary.

DECEMBER 3, 1915.

SOUTHERN RICE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
Beaumont, Tex., December 21, 1915.

Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In support of a request of the rice farmers of Texas, Louisiana, and Arkansas for a recanvass of the rice production estimate made by the Bureau of Crop Estimates, we are handing you herewith various reports pertinent to this question, and in addition a copy of a letter written this day to Mr. L. M. Estabrook, chief of the bureau.

Table No. 1 is a detailed statement compiled from reports of our agents, a specimen of which is marked No. 3.

Table No. 2 is a comparative statement that is self-explanatory.

Table No. 4 is a summary of our report No. 1.

Table No. 5 is a reprint from the Yearbooks of the Department of Agriculture on the acreage and yield for a period of years.

No. 6 is a report of the secretary of the Rice Millers' Association.

In the letter to Mr. Estabrook we have gone into this matter at length, and we are writing to urge you to use your influence to induce the bureau to make a recanvass of their rice estimate.

This is a matter of decided importance to your constituents, and we feel that your interest in the welfare of the farmers will prompt you to give this matter the careful attention it deserves.

Yours, very truly,

E. A. EIGNUS, General Manager.

BEAUMONT, TEX., December 21, 1915.

Mr. L. M. ESTABROOK,
Chief of Bureau of Crop Estimates, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with our wire of the 20th we are inclosing a detailed table showing the figures used in making up our production report. This is supplemented by an agents' report we are sending merely as a specimen to indicate the form used by our agents in sending us the data for our report. We employed 50 men in this work, every one of whom is a salaried employee working in the field. They are not office men, but are trained rough-rice men, and are in close touch with the acreage and production in their own districts.

There are very few rice growers in the three principal producing States whom one or more of our men do not know personally.

We show in detail in southwest Louisiana the yield and production on 279,161 acres, or 82.3 per cent of the total acreage in that section of the State. Without fear of contradiction we wish to state that this is a much larger percenage of the total than has ever been used in detail as a basis for calculation.

In the State of Texas our figures show the detail on 211,717 acres out of a total of 255,000 acres, or 83 per cent.

In Arkansas we show the detail on 81,563 acres out of a total of 90,000 acres, or 90.6 per cent. Our Arkansas table shows the figures as first compiled, with a corrected summary. We have sold in that State since the 10th of this month about 150,000 sacks, and in handling this business our men became more conversant with the stocks still in first hands, which, taken in conjunction with the movement up to this date, enables us to make a very close estimate of the actual number of sacks produced in the State. In this connection I desire to state that the acreage and production figures formerly used by your bureau, the Millers' Association and ourselves, have been more or less in the form of a guess. This is due to the fact that the rice acreage in the State is scattered over so wide an area and so many of the farms are isolated that the usual methods employed in gathering data for statistical work did not work successfully there. Realizing this fact, we instructed our Arkansas State manager early in July to spare no expense or time in making a careful census of the farmers, together with their acreage. In our preliminary acreage estimate we carried Arkansas at 100,000 acres, but in a circular letter to our members, under date of August 2, we emphasized the fact that the Government estimate of 107,393 acres was entirely too high, and mentioned the difficulty experienced in securing accurate figures on acreage there. We later cut our Arkansas acreage to 90,000 acres, and feel that this is close to the mark.

This organization is affiliated with the Pacific Rice Growers' Association, and our California estimate is made up from figures furnished by the California growers in addition to the advice from our Mr. Sanders, who is still in California. The Department of Agriculture maintains a rice experimental station at Biggs, Cal. This work is under the direction of Mr. Ernest Adams, who perhaps is more conversant with the rice situation in California than any other man. We would suggest that you wire Mr. Adams for his estimate of the California production.

We desire to call your attention to Table No. 2, which shows in detail your acreage and production estimates month by month. The fact that you reduced your acreage 41,356 acres, of which about 30,000 acres was in Texas, indicates that your earlier postings were faulty. If you deemed it necessary to make this marked cut in acreage, is it not reasonable to presume that your estimate of production might also be at fault?

Your grand average yield for the United States on your corrected acreage for 1915 is 9.01 bags, or 36 bushels. It is interesting to note that, according to the figures published in the Yearbooks of the Department of Agriculture, in no year since 1904 has the yield equaled your estimate for 1915. The next highest year was in 1910, with a yield of 33.9 bushels, or 2.1 bushels less than the estimate for the current year. This is in face of the fact that the storm of August 16 was the most general and destructive ever experienced in the coastal rice belt.

Your estimate of the Louisiana production will not bear close analysis, because of the marked increase in your December report over that of previous months. Then, again, your October report is 156,000 bags in excess of your September figures, notwithstanding the damage to the river rice that was in shock at the time of the storm of September 28. Your August report indicated a total yield in Louisiana of 3,296,250 bags, and yet in the face of the severe storms of August 16 and September 28 your final production is 135,000 bags over that period. The most glaring error in your report is in the increase in Louisiana sackage from September to December. Your December report shows an increase over that of September of 465,500 sacks. The rice crop of Louisiana was practically all made September 1, and certainly there was no warrant for increasing the production nearly half a million sacks.

Your Texas figures are rather confusing, due to the fact that you reduced the acreage in that State about 30,000 acres. We have sold and graded a great deal of rice in all sections of the State since the issuance of our report and are more than ever convinced that our figures for the Texas production are full high. The Millers' Association do not usually underestimate the production, and yet their figures for Texas are slightly below our own.

The Southern Rice Growers' Association is a farmers' cooperative marketing organization, and our only interest in this matter is to aid in securing the best obtainable figures. We do not desire to deceive either ourselves or the trade.

We feel that because of the great discrepancy in the report of your bureau, as compared with the report of the millers and ourselves, you should recanvass your rice-production estimate.

This is a matter of vital importance to the rice farmer, as the publication of your report is bound to have a "bearish" effect upon both the rough and clean rice markets.

The rice growers in the three principal producing States do not feel that their interests are adequately represented in your department. Your Mr. Evans does not spend sufficient time in the field to familiarize himself with actual growing and producing conditions. To do this work effectively a man should live in the coast country, and devote his time to field work. This is a man's-sized job and can not be handled at long range. We feel that the rice industry has grown in such proportions that we should be shown such consideration.

In conclusion permit us to point to the fact that your September and October estimates are very similar to our own, as well as that of the Millers' Association, and there was nothing that could have entered into the equation to justify a material change from those estimates.

We are very much in earnest about this matter and will be glad to furnish you with greater detail on any particular section.

Yours, very truly,

SOUTHERN RICE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,

MESSAGE TO PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the publication in the RECORD of the message delivered by Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison to the Third Philippine Legislature, October 16, 1915, at the opening of the fourth session.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL TO THE THIRD PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE, MANILA, OCTOBER 16, 1915, AT THE OPENING OF THE FOURTH SESSION.

GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGISLATURE: I have the honor to address to you my third annual message and to express my earnest appreciation of the attention which has been accorded by your honorable body to the recommendations contained in my previous communications.

During the past year many of the foremost nations of the world have been engaged in war, and we should be profoundly thankful that peace and good will have existed during these trying times throughout all regions under the American flag.

Although our commercial and financial status was temporarily thrown into confusion by the outbreak of the European war, conditions in the Philippines rapidly returned to a comparatively normal basis, and to-day our total volume of commerce and the financial conditions in the islands are satisfactory, and indeed remarkable, in comparison with most other places in the world.

Politically our condition is marked by greater good feeling between the Americans and Filipinos, who are together working out the destinies of these islands, and by increased confidence and efficiency on the part of the citizens of the Philippines who have been so recently intrusted with a far greater share of self-government. The experience of the past two years demonstrates beyond question the justice of granting still further measures of self-government to the Filipino people, and to that end the passage of the Philippine bill by the new Congress is eagerly awaited. The bearing of the Filipino people under the disappointment at the recent failure of passage of the bill was admirable. The failure was due only to lack of time for its consideration during the last days of the Sixty-third Congress. We may, therefore, expect at the forthcoming session of Congress affirmative action upon this much-desired legislation.

The two years through which this government has just passed have been a period of economy and reform. The headlong rush of the insular government toward bankruptcy has been effectually checked, and by the exercise of the greatest patience and self-denial the legislative and executive officials of the government have succeeded in placing the treasury upon a sound basis. This year, for the first time since 1910, an actual cash balance will be found at the end of our annual operations. The excess of expenditures over income for the fiscal years 1911, 1912, and 1913 averaged approximately two and one-third million pesos, while in the calendar year 1913 it amounted to more than seven and one-half million pesos. It has been our duty to reduce this extraordinary structure of extravagance, but in the calendar year 1914, in spite of the saving in expenditures of more than five and one-half million pesos as compared with 1913, the revenue deficit amounted to ₱2,800,000. This deficit, however, was offset to the extent of approximately one and one-half million pesos by the transfer to the cash resources of the treasury of the latter sum from the surplus in the various sinking funds of the government, so that the net operations of 1914 resulted in a decrease of ₱1,300,000 in our already small resources. The final deficit, however, is more than accounted for by the decrease of ₱1,707,966 in our customs revenues during the latter months of the calendar year 1914 as compared with the calendar year 1913, due entirely to the effects of the war in Europe upon our commerce. Moreover, attention is invited to the fact that by the passage of the Underwood tariff bill on October 3, 1913, this government was deprived of revenues from export taxes theretofore levied in an annual amount of approximately ₱2,000,000. It is, therefore, clearly established that some permanent provision must be made by this government to replace the amount of revenue lost by the abolition of the export tax and to make certain that never again shall the necessity arise for a deficit in our annual fiscal operations, provided there be wise supervision by the legislative and executive departments of the government. As greater and greater extensions of self-government are given to the Filipino people, the expenditure of their revenues will invite closer and closer observation from all who are interested in their welfare and progress; it is imperatively necessary to establish this government upon a sound financial footing, since the very foundation of good government exists in the ability of a State to live within its ordinary income. You have proceeded wisely and with patience to take down the overwhelming burden of expenditures raised up by carelessness and extravagance; and yet, during this period of economy and reconstruction, the necessary activities of the government have not been restricted—useful public works have not been curtailed, but during 1915 have been materially enlarged, and greatly increased expenditures have been made for the purpose of bringing to the non-Christian inhabitants of the islands the benefits of more advanced civilization.

You have had forwarded to you to-day by the executive secretary the estimates of appropriations for the several bureaus and offices for the year 1916, and I ask prompt consideration of the appropriation bill by both houses of the legislature.

The emergency board created by section 2 of act No. 2431, the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, has again justified its creation.

During the recess period just closed—viz, February 6 to October 15, inclusive—18 bureaus and offices have requested that they be permitted to use the 5 per cent withheld from their appropriations in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of the appropriation act, and 16 of these requests have been granted.

During the same period the board considered 25 requests from bureaus and offices for allotments amounting to ₱316,637.49, of which 14, amounting to ₱231,919.46, were recommended by the emergency board and 13, amounting to ₱186,919.46, were approved by the Governor General and the speaker of the assembly. Although these allotments are to be added to the appropriations for specific items, they do not, as a matter of fact, increase the total appropriations made by the legislature for the interested bureaus and offices, except in two cases. The savings effected in other items by the chiefs of such bureaus and offices more than offset the allotments; they are, therefore, merely transfers in such cases from one fund to another within the bureau appropriation.

It may safely be stated that in the calendar year 1915, during which the policy of economy has been rigidly maintained in the matter of all unnecessary expenditures, and during which additional internal-revenue taxes were imposed to guard against all contingencies which might arise from the world-wide disturbance of commerce, a comfortable cash balance will be accumulated in the Treasury. Nevertheless, I invite your attention most earnestly to the necessity of continuing emergency taxation unless the legislature is now prepared to adopt a permanent increase of internal revenue to maintain this government upon a sound basis. The great war is still continuing with unabated vigor in Europe, and a prudent consideration of national finances will lead inevitably to the decision that further internal-revenue provision must be made. The present emergency taxation, like that of the United States, expires by operation of law on the 31st of December, 1915, and here, as in the United States, attention must be given by the legislature to a renewal or extension of that taxation. So long as the war continues, the necessity exists for caution and conservatism in this respect.

Moreover, additional revenues are needed now and will be needed in the coming years to meet the just demands and expectations of the people for further works of progress and economic improvement. Foremost among these I recommend to your consideration the necessity for the establishment by the government along conservative lines of an insular bank. Additional credit facilities are essential to the producers in these islands. It is of the utmost importance that the agriculturists of the Philippines should have more extensive opportunities for obtaining credit upon their lands, upon their live stock, agricultural implements, and growing crops. Other classes of producers in the community are also entitled to consideration in this regard. In the formation of this bank due consideration should be given to the private banking interests already existing, that all danger of creating a government monopoly of banking may be averted. It is wholly undesirable to continue in the executive officials of the government the banking functions necessitated by the present situation. In the years 1914 and 1915, after due consideration of the existing circumstances, I have continued and increased the amounts of public funds previously deposited in private banking institutions of the Philippines, upon proper guaranty, for the credit and relief of landowners in the sugar regions of Iloilo, Negros, and Mindoro. At the present time the sum of ₱3,600,000 of public money is on deposit with banks for the purpose of assisting in the development of the sugar industry of the islands, and these operations should be transferred to a government bank instead of being made under the direction of the Governor General. It is my intention, as I have publicly announced upon several occasions, to discontinue such use of the public moneys when the outstanding loans by the banks are repaid during the year 1916, and I urge that the legislature make provision for the creation of a bank which is prepared to furnish credit as a business undertaking to all agriculturists in the islands who can furnish proper and sufficient security. Unless this be done, the present system of government deposits will encourage the permanent establishment in your archipelago of a class of persons tending to become entirely dependent upon government aid until some will conceive it to be their vested right to receive special aid or favors from the government. These banking operations should be founded upon a basis of equal opportunity for all agriculturists, and the bank instituted and controlled by the government which makes these loans should derive the financial benefit from these operations.

In this connection I invite your interest in legislation intended to advance more rapidly the progress of the cadastral survey and the registration of land titles. This should be expedited, as it is the very root of the credit question in these islands.

Moreover, I urge upon you once more the speedy passage of a law forbidding and penalizing the practice of usury in the Philippines. Until this is done proper advantage can not be taken by the people of the credit facilities afforded them by the Government and through commercial banks.

Agricultural operations in the islands were adversely affected during the autumn of 1914 by the continued drought, and large importations of rice from foreign countries were again necessary during the current year. This is a serious drain upon the resources of the people and an effort should be made to establish irrigation systems upon a sound basis so that these islands shall become self-supporting in the matter of food supply. I suggest, therefore, that you consider the question of amendments to the irrigation law which shall facilitate the formation of small irrigation units established upon the cooperative plan and founded with loans from the trust funds or from the Government bank. Rinderpest and the locust plague are still with us as they have been for so many years in the past, and you are requested to give further study to plans for the final elimination of these grave menaces to agriculture. The experience of many years in the Philippines has demonstrated the fact that quarantine alone is not sufficient to eradicate rinderpest from the islands, although the spread of the disease is undoubtedly greatly restricted by the efforts put forth by the people to that end. Nevertheless, recent investigations of the subject indicate that a satisfactory solution of the question may be found in the simultaneous inoculation resulting in immunization of the cattle. Further and much larger appropriations for this purpose are therefore advised.

The sugar central board, instituted by the present legislature at its last session, is about to execute the contract for the construction of a modern central at Isabela, in the Province of Occidental Negros, and your attention is invited to the necessity for providing for the construction of other centrals, thereby placing the sugar industry of these islands upon a footing where it may safely compete with any of the sugar-producing regions of the world. The recent agricultural congress held in the city of Manila demonstrates the intention of the Filipino people to act in cooperation and to organize themselves for the improvement of their agriculture along the most modern lines. You are requested to study the recommendations of that Congress with a view to adopting such of their suggestions as may be at this time feasible, thereby affording to the farmers of the islands all possible legislative encouragement.

The construction, through Government aid, of centrals for the drying of copra and the expressing of coconut oil should also be considered. Of all the large copra-producing regions of the world, Philippine copra to-day brings the lowest price, and it seems certain that if properly dried the copra from these islands will bring at least ₱1 a picul more than at present in the world's markets.

Since the Filipinization of this legislature large additional sums have been granted for the work of education of the non-Christian peoples. Although such peoples constitute only about one-eighth part of the inhabitants of the Philippines, the problem of their advancement is one of vital importance for the future as well as for the present and one which receives the sympathetic attention of all who are interested in the welfare of these islands. During the last two years 42 new Government schools have been established in the Mountain Province alone, and the work there of sanitation, irrigation, and industrial and agricultural advancement is being rapidly pushed. A considerable sum has been spent in the same period in the Mountain Province for public works in small units for the benefit of the mountain people, in addition to the large sums expended for the construction of the Naguilian Road.

In the department of Mindanao and Sulu vastly increased expenditures have been made for the education of the people of those regions. The notable success of the department government has materially advanced the day when all the peoples of the Philippines are to be universally recognized as one homogeneous family. Building now upon the foundations already so securely established in the department of Mindanao, I recommend to the legislature that the large appropriations made for that department this year be materially increased in the expenditures for 1916. An additional sum of at least ₱500,000 should be devoted during 1916 to the establishment of schools throughout the regions inhabited by Mohammedan and pagan peoples.

The public treasury is already strained to the utmost by the appropriations for education in the Philippines; approximately 21½ per cent of the revenues of 1914 were spent for purposes of education. It seems probable that the proportionate limit of expenditures for that purpose is reached, in consideration of the many other public improvements so justly demanded by the people. The greatest interest and enthusiasm in public education is shown by all classes of persons in these islands, and at times it seems almost impossible for the Government to meet the demands upon its resources for this purpose. It can hardly be expected that any Government should spend more than one-fifth of its revenues for the purpose of education, and yet a large number of children in the Philippines are at the present time unable to attend the public schools through lack of facilities. The number of pupils in the public schools to-day is 500,000. At this time last year it was 495,000; in 1913, 492,000; and in 1912, 341,000. In spite of the fact that an increasingly large number of children is obtaining admittance to the public schools, I invite your cooperation in an effort to solve the question along permanent lines. The problem is how to adapt our resources to the present situation. Every child in the Philippines is entitled to a primary education from the Government; in fact, the only safe foundation for a democratic form of government is universal primary education. Every citizen of a State who knows how to read and write is better qualified to protect his own rights and can decide for himself how to vote upon public questions presented to him or to her. It should be regarded, therefore, as a fundamental principle in free government that the State owes to its citizens the right to a primary education. The only great and enduring democracies of the modern world are founded upon that principle. It should, therefore, be our purpose to devote an ever-increasing proportion of the expenditures for educational purposes to that end. In order that the people of any locality in the islands may establish additional free institutions for higher education, the legislature should give them greater power to tax themselves for that special purpose.

Very great interest is shown by the legislature in the extension of the excellent sanitary system of the city of Manila to the Provinces, and full support should be given to the plan for provincial sanitary commissions advocated by the Philippine health service; wherever possible, provincial hospitals should be constructed and encouragement afforded for the further extension of dispensaries to the more remote regions. Study and systematic investigation of the problem of the care of the insane in the islands is also recommended, with a view to establishing here an institution which shall afford proper care for those unfortunate people. Further scientific investigation of the causes and possible cure of leprosy should be instituted by the legislature. It is believed that the Philippine Government already occupies a permanent place in the estimation of the scientific world by its handling of this problem.

Attention is invited to the excellent and economic administration of the finances of the city of Manila by the municipal board, but you are again requested to consider the necessity for the passage of a law providing for special assessments upon the owners of property benefited by the extension of much-needed public works in the city.

In the executive branch of this government plans are under contemplation for a further extension of the efficiency system already adopted in many of the modern mercantile houses of the United States. This system is now in operation in certain of the bureaus, and its adoption in the others is being earnestly pressed. While very great economies have been effected in the bureau expenditures in the past two years, additional efforts in that direction will further promote the efficiency of the government.

It is my pleasant duty once more to comment upon the harmony existing between the two houses of the legislature and between the legislative and executive branches of the government. All elements of this government are working with efficiency and in serious cooperation, and each unit may take pride in the successful progress of the Filipino people to more complete and well-merited self-government.

I again urge upon you the prompt consideration of the appropriation bill for the ensuing year, and wish for you the same success as has been attained during the past two years.

DEATH OF ASSOCIATE JUSTICE LAMAR.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I desire to announce to the Senate the death of Associate Justice Joseph Rucker Lamar, of the Supreme Court of the United States, a distinguished citizen of Georgia and a distinguished jurist, whose life and character and great public services have been a credit to the State, the Nation, and the judiciary. As a mark of respect to his memory, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 5, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 4, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, Source of life and thought and action, through the dispensation of whose providence time sweeps on with ceaseless energy! Another year has passed with its predecessors into history. A new year has dawned upon us, with its hopes and possibilities, its duties and responsibilities. May the accumulated knowledge, wisdom, and achievements of the past be stepping-stones to larger life, clearer perceptions, and nobler achievements, that with ever-growing faith in the eternal verities and the values which make for righteousness in the soul we may march forward with firm steps and ever-brightening hopes to that goal for which every true man and every honest nation longs.

Our hearts, O God our Father, are profoundly moved by the death of a member of the Supreme Court. In his going the Republic loses one of its able jurists, the world a noble man, his friends and family a tender, loving heart. Comfort them, we beseech Thee, in the eternal truth of the immortality of the soul through Him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me shall never die." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 17, 1915, was read and approved.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON RURAL CREDITS (H. DOC. NO. 494).

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, the Joint Committee of the Senate and House on Rural Credits, authorized by an act of the last Congress, is prepared to report, and I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] announces that the Joint Committee on Rural Credits is ready to report, and asks unanimous consent to have that report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state it?

Mr. MANN. Is this report presented in the House or through the basket?

The SPEAKER. No; it is presented through the basket.

Mr. MANN. Of course it will be ordered printed as a House document with proper reference?

The SPEAKER. Inasmuch as the gentleman wanted to ask unanimous consent, I told him to announce what it was. Of course that report goes through the basket. Is there objection to the request to print it in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the report is referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The report is as follows:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RURAL CREDITS,
Washington, D. C., January 3, 1916.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
Chairman of the Joint Committee on Rural Credits.

DEAR MR. GLASS: I am instructed by the Subcommittee on Land Mortgage Loans to recommend to the full joint committee the accompanying bill, which I have the honor to transmit with the following report:

MODERN FARMING REQUIRES CAPITAL IN LARGE AMOUNTS—THE AMERICAN FARMER HAS THE BEST SECURITY IN THE WORLD, PRODUCTIVE LAND—THIS BILL ENABLES THE FARMER TO OBTAIN CAPITAL FOR PRODUCTIVE PURPOSES AT LOW RATES AND FOR LONG TERMS ON THE SECURITY OF HIS FARM.

NECESSITY FOR FARM CAPITAL.

The successful farmer becomes more of a business man each year. He must use more machinery, buy more fertilizer, and sow better seed. He must erect better buildings, raise better stock, and grow better crops. He must store his produce in order to sell in a high market. He must pay cash in order to buy cheap. If he wishes to keep his children on the farm he must make his home attractive. All of this costs money. He must have ready cash.

DIFFICULTY OF SECURING CAPITAL.

The farmer applies to the nearest bank for a loan and offers his farm as security. The banker makes excuses. He doesn't know the farmer; he doesn't know the value of his farm; he doesn't like to tie his demand deposits up in long-term loans; his commercial customers who carry a substantial line of deposits have the first claim. These excuses are well founded.

There may be additional excuses not so genuine, such as the scarcity of money, the hard hearts of the directors, unusual demands for loans, and the like. If the farmer gets a loan at all, he pays a high rate or he must be subject to foreclosure on short notice. He usually pays some one a large commission; he is subject frequently to substantial renewal fees; he is sometimes compelled to pay taxes on the mortgage as well as on the land; and he finds himself in the power of some hard-headed banker. He can not complain of this; it is the business of a banker to be hard-headed.

USURIOUS RATES OF INTEREST.

In many parts of the country the farmer is charged extortionate and inexcusable rates of interest, regardless of usury laws and a decent regard for human necessities. He has a real grievance here.

DEMAND FOR REASONABLE FACILITIES.

But in spite of his grievance the American farmer does not come to Congress with a hard-luck story. He does not ask the Government to bestow on him the public money that all the people have contributed in taxes. He does not demand that the Government become a banker in order to borrow money on bonds and loan the proceeds to him. He merely calls attention to the fact that farming has become a business, demanding large amounts of capital; he points out the undoubted excellence of the security he officers; and he demands legislation that shall put it in the power of those who are interested and those who have money to invest to extend to him the credit he requires. He desires the Government to authorize a system of land banks which shall duplicate for him the facilities now commanded by men engaged in manufacturing, in transportation, and in commerce.

COMMERCIAL BANKS NOT SUITED TO FARMERS' LONG-TERM NEEDS.

The Federal reserve act passed by the last Congress placed the capstone on a superb structure for commercial credit. It gathers the quick capital of the country into great reservoirs, where it is readily available for the needs of trade. Member banks receive the cash deposits of the Nation, and must be prepared at all times to restore them on demand. They must, therefore, invest these deposits in short-time loans, so that a steady stream of payments is flowing into the banks, giving them a chance to extend or contract their loans in response to the rise and fall in the supply of deposits. It follows that a commercial bank ought not to make many loans for longer periods than it takes to carry through the ordinary commercial transaction.

An effort was made, however, to extend accommodation to the farmer through the Federal reserve act. National banks were encouraged to make personal loans to farmers for periods of six months and were to a limited extent permitted to loan on improved farm lands for periods not exceeding five years; but your subcommittee is convinced that loans must be made available to farmers on long-term mortgage security through some medium other than the commercial bank.

We have seen that the commercial bank has a valid claim to demand deposits. This leaves for our consideration savings or time deposits and money seeking long-term investment.

TIME DEPOSITS NOT AVAILABLE FOR LONG-TERM MORTGAGE.

The ordinary time deposit may be withdrawn on 30 or 60 days' notice. It is therefore not properly invested in long-term mortgages. Short-term mortgages or long-term personal credits are more appropriate. Even the mutual savings banks of the East, with their vast resources, will not place a large percentage of their funds in farm mortgages. They dislike to loan on farm mortgages at all, and when they do make such loans they insist upon a demand note or a note due in six months at best. It is fair to say, however, that such notes are often allowed to run indefinitely after they are due, but the farmer is in constant dread that he will be compelled to pay at an inconvenient time.

MONEY SEEKING LONG-TERM INVESTMENT.

Of money seeking long-term investment at low rates there is an abundant supply. It includes the ordinary savings of the school-teacher, clerk, minister, and wage earner; the proceeds of life insurance in the hands of widows and other beneficiaries; funds belonging to estates, minors, and wards in chancery in the hands of executors, guardians, and trustees; funds of insurance companies, benevolent orders, and societies of various kinds; endowments of colleges, hospitals, museums, and other institutions; and assets to be invested by receivers, courts, and governments. The aggregate of these is enormous. They require an investment that is absolutely safe and reasonably liquid in the sense that it may be converted into cash upon moderate notice; in other words, that it may find a ready market. A safe investment of this character need not carry a high rate of interest.

INVESTOR AND FARMER BROUGHT TOGETHER FOR MUTUAL PROFIT.

Here we discover the funds that should be made available to the farmer on long-term mortgage. We may picture the owners of this vast wealth grouped on one side of a river, the farmers desiring loans grouped on the other side. It is evident that each has what the other wants. We are asked to furnish the bridge which shall bring them in touch or, rather, to grant a franchise to those who will build the bridge if we will construct the approaches. Such we conceive to be a proper function of the Government.

It is evident that the school-teacher in Vermont, with $500 to invest, can not be sure that the Kansas farm mortgage offered her is a sound investment. The title of the mortgagor may be defective; the farmer may be improvident; the land may not be productive. She has no way to ascertain these primary facts. But if she is able to buy a long-term bond, with semiannual coupons sure to be promptly paid, secured in common with thousands of like bonds on millions of dollars' worth of farm lands, guaranteed by 12 banks with an aggregate capital of not less than six millions, with selected borrowers of known character, with titles examined and all details attended to by trained men, and with Government examination and supervision, she may invest with confidence on a moderate-income basis.

A bond of this character would be safer than a savings-bank deposit, and it would bring a higher return than savings banks average. It has been the aim of your subcommittee to devise a system of land banks which shall bring the investor and the farmer together for mutual profit at a moderate cost through the medium of such a bond.

PRIMARY CONSIDERATIONS.

The primary considerations in devising such a system are:

1. Absolute safety and attractive income to the investor.
2. Low interest rates, long-term mortgages, and amortization payments for the farmer.
3. Low cost of administration.
4. Simplicity of organization and operation.
5. Adaptability to every part of the country.
6. Stimulation to the cooperative spirit.

These details will be discussed after a general description of the plan.

GENERAL PLAN.

Government control of the system is assured by the creation of a Federal farm loan board, independent and nonpartisan, consisting of five members, appointed by the President for terms of 10 years each and paid from the Public Treasury. (Sec. 3.)

TWELVE LAND BANKS.

Loans are made to farmers by 12 or more Federal land banks, each operating in a separate district and having a capital of not less than $500,000. If the full amount is not subscribed from private sources, the Government subscribes for as much as may be necessary to make up the required amount. Provision is made for returning the Government subscription after the land banks are firmly established. (Secs. 4 and 5.)

LOCAL ASSOCIATIONS.

In order to secure intimate touch with the borrowers it is provided that the land bank shall make loans to farmers through local associations of borrowers, called national farm loan associations. These associations do not conduct a banking business. Their operations are very simple. They admit members who desire to borrow; their directors and loan committees pass on the value of the security and the character of the borrower. Every borrower takes stock in the farm loan association to the amount of 5 per cent of the face of his loan. This amount is subscribed by the association to the stock of the land bank, thus providing for a capital proportionate to the amount of loans, approximating 1 to 20. (Secs. 7 and 8.)

LIMITED OR UNLIMITED LIABILITY.

The farm loan associations may be of limited liability or of unlimited liability. In the former each member is liable for the debts of the association in an amount equal to the face of his subscribed stock; in the latter the member undertakes unlimited liability for all the debts of the association. This individual liability gives to the indorsement of the association solid financial backing. The bill provides that all loans shall be indorsed by the association of which the borrower is a member. (Secs. 9 to 12.)

We thus have a mortgage loan secured by productive farm land indorsed by a farm loan association. The loan indorsed by a farm loan association, with unlimited liability on the part of its members, will naturally have a better standing than loans indorsed by an association in which the liability is limited. Each land bank will keep the two classes of mortgages separate. (Sec. 16.)

FARM LOAN BONDS SECURED BY MORTGAGES.

When the land bank has a substantial amount of either kind of mortgages on hand, not less than $50,000, it may issue a like amount of farm loan bonds based on the mortgages as collateral security. Every farm loan bond limited is secured by all the farm mortgages held by the land bank on which there is limited liability of the local members; every farm loan bond unlimited is secured by all the mortgages held by the land bank on which there is unlimited liability of the local members. Because of the unlimited liability the latter bonds should be sold on a more favorable basis than the former. (Secs. 16, 22–26.)

Every Federal land bank guarantees the payment of every bond and coupon issued by every other Federal land bank. This gives them a broad insurance. (Sec. 25.)

EXPENSES AND PROFITS.

The land banks are permitted to charge borrowers 1 per cent more for interest than they pay bondholders. For example, if the current rate on farm loan bonds is 4 per cent, the bank may charge not to exceed 5 per cent to farmers who borrow. This margin of 1 per cent on the amount of unpaid principal outstanding is available to the bank for its expenses and earnings, but it will probably be largely reduced in practice. The profits go to the local associations in the form of dividends on stock of the land bank held by the associations, and reach the borrowers in the form of dividends on stock held by them in the associations. In this way the earnings of the system go to the borrowers and its cooperative character is assured. If the 1 per cent margin is too high no harm is done, for the excess comes back to the borrower in dividends. (Sec. 13.)

Such is the general plan of the system which we recommend.

Coming now to the details of the bill, we shall first speak of the farm loan bonds as an attractive investment.

STRENGTH OF THE BONDS.

It is obvious that the first requisite of a long-term bond bearing a low rate of interest is its security. Every reasonable safeguard is provided in the bill.

RESTRICTIONS ON MORTGAGES.

The mortgages which stand as security back of the bonds are carefully restricted.

No bank may loan on land outside its district.

Every mortgage deposited as security is on the amortization plan, so that part of the principal is paid up every six months.

The money must be borrowed for productive purposes, for the purchase of a farm for a home, or to liquidate existing indebtedness.

No loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of the mortgaged land.

The borrower must engage in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

The maximum of loans to one borrower is limited to $10,000.

The purpose for which the loan is obtained must be stated.

The loan becomes due and payable upon breach of any condition of the mortgage. Section 12.

APPRAISAL.

Every application for a loan must be passed upon by the loan committee of the local association, who shall make a detailed written report, signed by all three members, giving the appraisal of the land as determined by them. The directors and the loan committee must approve the loan, the latter unanimously, before it is recommended to the land bank. The application and the report of the loan committee go to the land bank.

The land bank must refer the application and the report of the loan committee to one or more of the land-bank appraisers for the district. These appraisers are public officials appointed by the Federal farm loan board. (Section 3.) They have no inducement to make an excessive appraisal. It is their duty to make a careful and impartial written report, and no loan may be made unless their report is favorable. The directors of the land bank must then decide whether or not to make the loan.

Every application thus runs the gantlet of the local loan committee, the local board of directors, the land-bank appraisers, and the land-bank directors.

Whenever mortgages are put up as security for the issue of farm-loan bonds, they are referred by the farm-loan board to special appraisers for further appraisal and examination. Section 20.

SECURITY OF BONDS.

Every farm-loan bond is secured as follows:

1. By the capital, reserves, and earnings of the land bank which issues it.

2. By the capital, reserves, and earnings of the 11 other land banks.

3. By the collective security of all the mortgages in its division (limited or unlimited) of the land bank, the mortgages pledged being at least equal in amount to the outstanding bonds.

Every mortgage pledged as collateral is secured as follows:

1. By the personal undertaking of the borrower.

2. By the security of the mortgaged land at least double in value to the amount of the loan.

3. By the capital, reserves, and earnings of the local association indorsing the loan.

4. By the individual liability of the members of the indorsing association.

ATTRACTIVENESS OF THE BONDS AS AN INVESTMENT.

A bond of the undoubted security possessed by the farm-loan bonds above described should prove a most attractive investment. Since all the bonds are guaranteed by all the land banks, they should sell on practically the same basis throughout the country. And it is not too much to expect them to sell on a 4 per cent basis. In such case the farmer would get his loans at 5 per cent.

An absolutely safe investment, with interest payable semiannually on a 4 per cent basis, should be able to compete with other long-term investments or savings banks on its merits.

TAX EXEMPTION.

It is proposed, however, to make these bonds and the income derived therefrom exempt from all Federal, State, and local taxation. This exemption should place them ahead of any bonds bearing the same rate and not enjoying a similar exemption. Section 30.

INVESTMENT IN FARM-LOAN BONDS.

Farm-loan bonds are also made a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds and may be accepted as security for all public deposits. They may also be purchased by member banks of the Federal Reserve System. Section 31.

INTEREST RATES TO FARMERS.

Present interest rates to farmers are so confused with commissions, fees, and charges of various sorts that it is difficult to ascertain the total cost of money on farm mortgages. Dr. C. W. Thompson, specialist in charge of Rural Organization in the Department of Agriculture, reports that the average rate varies from 5.3 per cent in New Hampshire to 9 per cent and even 10 per cent in certain Southern and Western States, including commissions. As this is the average rate, there must be individual cases running much higher. Testimony before the joint subcommittee of the Senate and House Committees on Banking and Currency in 1914 gave the maximum rate as high as 25 per cent, including commissions and charges.

It is readily seen that a rate as low as 5 per cent, 5½ per cent, or even 6 per cent would be of great benefit to farmers in most sections of the United States.

LONG-TERM MORTGAGES.

Where money is borrowed by farmers to invest as fixed capital in the purchase of a home, in the erection of farm buildings, in the construction of roads, drains, and fences, in the purchase of machinery and stock, or for like purposes, the loan should be paid out over a long period, varying somewhat with the permanence of the investment. At present it is difficult for a farmer to borrow money for a longer period than five years, and with renewals come additional commissions, fees, and charges. Even where it is the policy of banks to allow a loan to run for a long period without demanding payment, they insist upon a demand obligation, so that their funds will not be tied up in case of sudden calls for deposits. This arrangement leaves the farmer in a continual state of uncertainty, as he may be called on to pay in times of financial stress when it may be impossible to obtain funds.

The bill provides, therefore, that loans may be made for long terms, not to exceed 36 years. It is believed that a longer period would not be advisable for the United States, although farm mortgages are made in Europe for periods as long as 75 years.

The reason for fixing upon a maximum period of 36 years is explained in the following section.

AMORTIZATION PAYMENTS.

Ultimate payment of the mortgage debt is as important to the farmer as a low rate of interest. Experience teaches that a borrower is most likely to pay out his loan if he pays in small regular installments at fixed periods.

For example, if the farmer pays 5 per cent interest on his loan, payable semiannually, and with each interest payment pays 1 per cent on the principal of his loan, his debt will be entirely paid off in 36 years. If he pays a larger percentage of his loan with each payment, liquidation of the principal will be correspondingly quicker.

The approved practice is to spread the entire payment over the term of the loan in fixed equal semiannual payments. When the rate of interest is fixed and the borrower decides what percentage of the loan he will undertake to pay off each year the semiannual payments are readily figured. All students of rural credits recommend this feature.

LOW COST OF ADMINISTRATION.

We have already seen that every reasonable effort must be made to make the farm-loan bonds attractive to the investor at low rates and that safety is the prime requisite. It is clear, moreover, that the cost of proper safeguards, such as appraisals, examining titles, and the ordinary overhead charges of a banking business, must be met by the borrower in the form of increased interest charges.

Broadly speaking, large expenditures to insure absolute safety will be reflected in the favorable rates on farm-loan bonds. But there is a point at which expenditure would be out of proportion to the results obtained. In the solution of this problem the subcommittee has been guided by sound banking principles and the experience of similar systems in Europe.

ASSISTANCE FROM BORROWERS.

Everyone must concede the importance of strong land banks, managed by trained bankers, for the purpose of making sound loans and issuing sound bonds. Salaries and expenses comparable to those of a joint-stock bank must be expected in the performance of these essential functions.

But the special capabilities of the land-bank managers must be supplemented by an intimate knowledge of the borrower and his affairs, particularly of the farm land he offers as security. This supplementary knowledge is furnished without additional cost through the local associations.

At the outset we secure the personal interest of the borrower by requiring him to contribute to the capital of the loan association 5 per cent of the face of his loan. This personal stake makes the system mutual and makes the borrower a cooperator. His interest is further secured by his personal liability as a stockholder (double or unlimited, as the case may be). He knows that if the association recommends and indorses a bad loan he may be called on to help make the loan good.

We should thus expect every member to keep careful watch lest his loan association make unsafe loans, with resulting personal loss to him. We should also expect him to see that the best available men in the community act as directors and as members of the loan committee.

As it is the essence of cooperation that the members shall contribute their services, we shall get all this local care, supervision, and personal interest without the payment of fees or salaries. The only salaried official of loan associations will be the secretary-treasurer, and as all the banking business and most of the bookkeeping will be done by the land bank, and as there will be no local office to be kept open for daily business, his remuneration should be small.

We believe the cost of administration will be as low as safety permits.

SIMPLICITY OF ORGANIZATION AND OPERATION.

The purpose is to make the system as simple as is consistent with efficiency and security.

A central board to represent the public seems essential.

Land banks to do the technical banking business can not be dispensed with. This business must be done by some one and paid for. It is not the sort of work that members can contribute gratuitously.

The necessary intimate contact with the farmer is done effectively, directly, and cheaply through local cooperative associations.

Farmers of a given locality apply to the land bank of their district for a charter. The land bank supplies circulars, blanks, and all necessary information. After the charter is granted the land bank makes the loans and the payments are forwarded to it by the local associations. The land banks issue the bonds and get fresh supplies of money to loan to new borrowers.

It is plain that the land banks do the real business of the system. They make the loans and they issue the bonds, but they are under the supervision of the farm-loan board and they command the help of the local associations. The system is simplicity itself.

ADAPTABILITY TO EVERY PART OF THE COUNTRY.

A study of the various European systems discloses three main types of land-mortgage banks:

1. Cooperative banks with unlimited liability.
2. Cooperative banks with limited liability.
3. Joint-stock banks.

COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS.

The reported bill permits farmers to organize local associations with double liability or with unlimited liability. If they will organize mainly on the unlimited plan, they will get lower rates of interest, for mortgages carrying unlimited liability of the borrowers for all debts of the association make the safest basis for farm-loan bonds, and hence would insure fresh supplies of capital at the lowest rates.

Your subcommittee has felt it wise to make either form of cooperative association available for the use of farmers, so that they may make their choice. It is quite possible that an association with limited liability may exist in the same community with an unlimited association.

It has not been difficult to devise a plan under which both classes of cooperative associations may be organized and obtain accommodation for their members through the same land banks, with a segregration of assets, expenses, and earnings. Experience alone will demonstrate which type will be most availed of. One type may appeal more strongly to the farmers of one district, with the contrary result in another district.

JOINT-STOCK BANKS.

In some localities where land values are settled and farmers are accustomed to borrow from mortgage banks it is quite possible that farmers will prefer to obtain mortgage loans from a joint-stock bank operating under a Federal charter, with Federal restrictions and supervision.

Some farmers, moreover, may object to the association with their neighbors in cooperative undertakings; they may not like the publicity and scrutiny that cooperation entails; they may not be able or willing to subscribe 5 per cent of the face of the desired loan to the stock of the local association. Moreover, associations may start slowly in some States, leaving a wide field unoccupied for years.

Provision is therefore made (section 19) for the organization of joint-stock land banks of not less than $250,000 capital, to be privately subscribed. Their operations will be confined to a single State, and they will be permitted to make loans and to issue farm-loan bonds under the supervision of the farm-loan board. Their stockholders will assume double liability. Their capital will be readily available from the outset, and they will thus have certain advantages over cooperative banks in getting their money out on loans. In order, therefore, to equalize to some extent the earning power of the two classes of banks, they are limited in the issue of bonds to 15 times their capital and surplus. The cooperative banks may issue bonds to the amount of 20 times their capital and surplus.

Joint-stock land banks are not permitted to engage in any business but making farm-mortgage loans and issuing bonds. In States with populations exceeding 2,000,000 of people their capital stock must be not less than $500,000. Their bonds are called joint-stock bonds, and must be in such form as to be readily distinguished from bonds issued by Federal (cooperative) land banks. They are given a free hand as to interest rates on loans and bonds, except that the margin for expense and profit must not exceed 1 per cent a year on the principal of outstanding loans. (Sec. 19.)

Provision is thus made for the existence of the three types of mortgage loan. They will be competitors in granting loans and in selling bonds, but they will all be under strict Government supervision. Each type, in order to survive, must prove its usefulness. Your subcommittee feels that there is a field for all three.

LAND-BANK AGENTS.

It is desired that local associations organize in every community at an early date, but it is also recognized that on account of peculiar local conditions some communities may be without local associations or joint-stock land banks indefinitely. The farm-loan board is given power in such cases to authorize Federal land banks to make loans to farmers through duly incorporated trust companies, mortgage companies, or savings institutions.

Such loans would be subject to the conditions of loans made through farm-loan associations, and the borrower would be required to contribute 5 per cent of the face of his loan to the capital of the land bank. The agent would indorse the loan and become responsible for its payment and the collection of interest and amortization installments, receiving such compensation as might be agreed, not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of the total unpaid amount of the loan. (Sec. 17.)

In this way it is hoped to take advantage of existing institutions in districts which are not otherwise adequately served. It is feared that the formation of cooperative associations would be retarded if the privilege of making loans through agents should be granted too freely. Hence the restriction expressed at the beginning of section 17.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

Time or savings deposits stand midway between demand deposits and funds seeking long-term investment, just as the farmer's need for cash to purchase machinery, fertilizer, and live stock stands midway between the commercial loan and the long-term mortgage. Savings deposits should therefore be available to the farmer for long-term personal credit or short-term mortgage credit not to exceed five years.

And since the various land banks will have facilities, as well as the overhead charges, of a regular bank, and since they will have local representatives in the farm-loan associations, it seems wise to give them power to establish savings departments for the handling of time deposits. (Sec. 18.)

The savings department will be kept separate from the other departments of the bank and the capital of the bank will not be liable for the depts of the savings department as long as there are farm-loan bonds outstanding and not satisfied.

This provision is made for two reasons—

1. Because the mutual savings banks of the East have not needed capital to inaugurate or to carry on their business.

2. Because the farm-loan bonds are the vital point in the long-term mortgage system, and their security must not be impaired by diverting any part of the capital.

To make up for the lack of capital in the savings department it is provided that 5 per cent of all time deposits shall be kept on hand in a liquid form as a guaranty fund. The remaining 95 per cent may be invested in five-year farm mortgages subject to call after one year, or in Government bonds, farm-loan bonds, or approved securities.

As a further means of making up for the lack of capital it is provided that all net earnings of the savings department shall go to reserve, so that in a few years this department will be in a very strong position.

The five-year mortgages taken by the savings department are not made eligible as security for farm-loan bonds. (Sec. 18.)

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

The land banks are authorized to act as Government depositaries, and are required to act as financial agents of the Government. They thus become instrumentalities of the Federal Government. (Sec. 6.)

RESERVES AND DIVIDENDS.

Farm loan associations and land banks are required to carry semi-annually to reserve account 25 per cent of their net earnings, until the reserves equal 20 per cent of the outstanding capital, and to maintain the reserves at 20 per cent. After the reserves equal the required percentage of the capital stock, 5 per cent of the net earnings must be carried to reserve annually. After the reserve requirements are met, the balance of net earnings is available for dividends. (Secs. 27 and 28.)

STATE LEGISLATION.

It is well understood that the laws in the several States vary as to land titles, registry, exemptions, homestead rights, foreclosure, and equities of redemption. It is therefore made the duty of the farm loan board to investigate these questions in each State, and to declare mortgages ineligible as security for farm-loan bonds in those States where the laws do not give adequate protection to those loaning on first mortgage. Very few, if any, States will fall within this rule, and they will doubtless amend their laws promptly in order to bring the benefits of the farm-loan system within reach of their citizens. (Sec. 32.)

OTHER PROVISIONS.

There are other important provisions of the proposed bill which need no discussion here, notably those concerning defaulted loans (sec. 29), examinations (sec. 33), penalties for accepting gifts, bonuses, or commissions, for giving false information, for embezzlement, for counterfeiting, etc. (sec. 24), dissolutions of loan associations and land banks (sec. 35), and appointment of receivers (sec. 25).

STIMULATING THE COOPERATIVE SPIRIT.

The rapid increase of tenant farmers and the tendency to abandon agriculture and seek the larger centers of population has become a national menace in this country as well as in Europe. It increases the cost of living and causes a one-sided development. Most civilized nations are already offering direct aid and other inducements to persuade the people back to the land. We believe that the United States can well afford the moderate encouragement provided in this bill.

Much has been accomplished in Europe by legislation that encourages cooperation. There are societies to organize cooperative institutions, lecturers who go about to spread the cooperative gospel, and training schools for boys, girls, and adults. There are laws establishing systems of personal rural credits as well as land-mortgage systems. There are cooperative buying, cooperative selling, cooperative creameries, markets, breeding establishments, insurance companies, and the like. These are all important, especially personal credits.

Our country lags far behind Europe in most matters of cooperation among farmers. There are conditions which render it more difficult here than in older countries. But so far as cooperation is applicable, and as speedily as we can adapt it to our own conditions, it should be established.

The framers of this bill realize that it is but one factor in the vast field for national cooperation that lies before the American farmer. But they entertain the hope that organization for the purpose of securing land-mortgage credit will bring neighboring farmers into closer touch all over the Union and will stimulate the cooperative spirit. Those men who organize farm-loan associations will become better acquainted and more trustful of each other, so that it will be comparatively easy to form organizations among the land-mortgage groups for personal-credit unions and various forms of cooperative activity.

In this connection we desire to acknowledge the debt we owe to those pioneers who have awakened the interest of the American people in rural credits. Largely through the efforts of Senator FLETCHER, of Florida, the American Commission and the United States Commission went to Europe in 1913 and gathered the information and evidence contained in Senate Document No. 214, Sixty-third Congress, first session, entitled "Agricultural Cooperation and Rural Credit in Europe."

Senator FLETCHER was chairman of both commissions. Mr. MOSS of Indiana, a member of the present joint committee and chairman of the subcommittee on personal rural credits, was an influential member of both commissions. Senator FLETCHER was unanimously invited to sit with the present joint committee in its deliberations. He has given much help and wise counsel to your subcommittee on frequent occasions. Members of the subcommittee on personal rural credits, particularly Mr. MOSS, Mr. HAWLEY, and Senator HOKE SMITH, have given most valuable assistance to the land-mortgage division.

SUMMARY.

It is believed that the system of land banks outlined in the proposed bill affords a safe and attractive farm-loan bond for the investing public—low interest rates, long-term mortgages, and easy payments for the farmers; low cost of administration; simplicity of organization and operation; adaptability to the needs of every section; and stimulation to the spirit of generous cooperation among farmers.

HENRY F. HOLLIS,
Chairman for the Subcommittee on Land Mortgage Loans.

Members of the subcommittee on land mortgage loans: Senator HOLLIS, of New Hampshire, chairman; Senator GORE, of Oklahoma; Senator NELSON, of Minnesota; Mr. GLASS, of Virginia; Mr. PHELAN, of Massachusetts; Mr. LEVER, of South Carolina; Mr. HAYES, of California.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be immediately considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution extending the time for filing an additional report of the joint committee of Congress to investigate rural credits.

Resolved, etc., That the time of the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress appointed pursuant to an act of Congress, approved March 4, 1915, be, and is hereby, extended for four months from the passage hereof, in which to file an additional report as required by the said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution just reported?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the reason for it?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House that the report submitted from the Joint Committee on Rural Credits relates exclusively to land-mortgage loans. This request for additional extension relates to personal rural-credit loans. There are two subcommittees, one considering land-credit loans and the other considering personal credit loans. The report submitted this morning relates altogether to the establishment of land banks, and the committee having under consideration personal rural credits asks for further time in which to report.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker, although I assume the delay means there will be no action by this Congress.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. BLACKMON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of this committee if four weeks would not be sufficient time in which to make this further report?

Mr. GLASS. Manifestly the chairman does not think so or he would not have submitted a request for four months. I do not think so, I will say to my colleague.

Mr. BLACKMON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRY. Withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. BLACKMON. I withhold it for a moment.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] if his request means that the subject shall be foreclosed from consideration by the House for four months, or if the Committee on Banking and Currency would not consider they had authority to take up the question and report it to the House at any time even if this resolution was passed?

Mr. GLASS. Undoubtedly we do not apprehend it will require four months. We discussed that in the committee. As a matter of precaution it was decided that we had best ask for an extension of time for four months. The personal-credit aspect of the matter has received very little attention so far, because the time of the committee has been devoted almost exclusively to the consideration of the land-mortgage credit aspect of the subject.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the difficulty under which this committee labors, and of course it has been a very hard task to write both of these bills. I am in hopes we may have legislation at this session. It was promised some time ago. It has been delayed too long. I do not wish to put any obstacle in the way of the committee, but it seems to me that it might get busy and give us legislation within the next month or so on the personal-credit phase of this question, and I will ask the gentleman if the Committee on Banking and Currency purposes taking up that question, too, and going into it immediately?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY. I would like to have an answer to the question.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. On what subject?

Mr. LANGLEY. On the tariff, the President's message, the war tax, preparedness, and so forth. [Laughter.] And to print certain articles bearing on these subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall probably have occasion during this session to express my views upon some, and perhaps all, of the topics I have mentioned in making this request, and I shall not therefore at this time attempt to discuss them in detail. My chief purpose is to put in the RECORD the recent expressions of certain distinguished Democrats who have heretofore enjoyed the confidence and esteem of the rank and file of their party. I am doing this with malice toward none and charity for all and in obedience to a sense of public duty, in the hope that a good many patriotic and trustful Democrats who are not subscribers to the papers in which these were published may thus be given the opportunity of reading what some of their leaders think of what the present Democratic Congress and administration have done and are proposing to do. First let me quote from the "peerless leader," the Hon. William Jennings Bryan. On the front page of one of the December issues of the Commoner there appears the following editorial, signed by Mr. Bryan:

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ANALYZED.

I have carefully read the President's message. We are committed to legislation which will give to the Filipinos the promise of ultimate independence, with steady progress in that direction. I am sure, too, that Congress will support the President in the effort to secure justice for Porto Rico. Recent events have strengthened the arguments in favor of the establishment of a Government-controlled fleet of merchantmen, and events have also increased the demand for a rural-credits measure written in the interest of the farmers.

But when the President touches on preparedness and suggests a scheme of taxation for carrying out the plan he enters a new field, and his revolutionary recommendations will find increasing opposition in both parties. The reasons which he gives do not support the appropriations for which he asks. Pan Americanism, if it differs at all from the Monroe doctrine, ought to lessen rather than increase the necessity for preparedness. If a small Army and Navy were sufficient to enforce the Monroe doctrine when the Latin American countries were suspicious of the United States, why do we need an increase now when that suspicion is removed and when the Republics of Central and South America are willing to cooperate with us in the support of the Monroe doctrine? Then, too, the enormous destruction of life in Europe will reduce the pressure over there and make it less probable that any nation in the near future will desire to colonize Latin America.

The President is unfortunate, also, in his suggestions in regard to taxes. The Democrats will not take kindly to the idea of taxing gasoline and automobiles. A few years ago only the rich owned automobiles; now they are becoming the farmers' carry-all, and with the increased use of gasoline for agricultural purposes, the farmer would feel that he was being singled out and made to bear new burdens for the benefit of munition factories to get ready for imaginary wars.

If an additional income tax is resorted to, the Democrats will, I think, insist that the burden be placed on large incomes and inheritances rather than on the incomes of those who will have to do the fighting if there is any fighting to be done.

The President's plan of taxation is quite sure to arouse opposition among the Republicans, whose support is solicited, as well as among the Democrats. The Republicans are not likely to favor the new income taxes, and they will probably demand as a condition to their support an increase in the tariff, to which the Democrats will not consent.

While the President's plan to largely increase the appropriations for the Army and Navy ought to fail because there is no necessity for such increase, its defeat will be made more certain by the dissensions sure to arise over the different kinds of taxation.

W. J. BRYAN.

Difficult as it may be for some to believe, this is the same Mr. Bryan who thrice led the Democratic hosts of the Nation. This is the same Mr. Bryan over whom the Democrats of Kentucky so often went into ecstacies of enthusiasm, and who, when his Democratic brethren of the old Commonwealth were hard pressed by their ancient foe, was brought down to sweep across the "Pennyrile" and the "Purchase" with cyclonic irresistibility. It is the same Mr. Bryan who took from that beloved old Democratic hero, CHAMP CLARK, the nomination at Baltimore and gave it to the man who wanted him "knocked into a cocked hat" and whom he is now seeking to convert into a sombrero of a similar design. As I think of it all the memories of the mighty past come floating back to me. I can hear the tread of the marshaled hosts of Kentucky Democracy as they shout, "Bryan! Bryan! William Jennings Bryan!" I hear again the echo of their applause when he is announced as the premier of the Cabinet. But lo, what a change has come over the spirit of their dreams. Their idol has been shattered; the mighty has fallen, and "now lies he there, and none so poor to do him reverence." My heart goes out in solicitude and sympathy for certain distinguished Kentucky Democrats who for these many years have posed as the mouthpiece and personal representatives of the matchless Nebraskan, and who in more recent times have been given the added prestige of being also the spokesman of his late chieftain, of whom he is now the foremost critic. I am wondering how these spokesmen are going to play the rôle of "good Lord, good devil," and I can not suppress a faint smile when I recall how merciless they were in twitting us over our little broils of four years ago and how conscienceless they were in taking advantage of them. Yea, verily, it maketh a great deal of difference whose ox is gored.

There is another distinguished Democrat who has been signally honored time and again by his party, whose championship of the principles of progressive Democracy is known from ocean to ocean, and whose name is a household word almost throughout the land. I refer to the Hon. William Randolph Hearst, whose achievements in the field of journalism are without parallel and whose efforts in behalf of the toiling masses have endeared him to them to a most remarkable degree. In the New York American of December 26 last there appeared on the front page over his signature the following article:

AN AMERICAN POLICY FOR THE DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS.

To the EDITOR OF THE AMERICAN:

About a year ago the New York American published a signed article of mine on the tariff.

This article earnestly urged the Democratic Party to abandon its free-trade policy, a policy which had persistently proved a disastrous failure, which had continually plunged the country into the depths of financial depression during Democratic administrations, and which had invariably resulted in a deficiency of revenue, which had to be met by extraordinary taxation or bond issues.

Our so-called war taxes, the burden of which was lately reimposed upon the country by Congress, are, as a matter of fact, not war taxes at all. They are free-trade taxes.

They are the tax additions which invariably follow Democratic tariff reductions.

They are direct assessments, levied upon the public to meet the deficit caused by the customary and conventional Democratic experiments in free trade.

However destructive the ultimate effect of the European war may be upon the foreign markets of this country, the immediate effect of the war has undoubtedly been to increase the consumption and accentuate the demand in Europe for a considerable number of our American products.

All sorts of food supplies and all sorts of manufactured articles required by the gigantic European armies have been in unusual demand and at extraordinary prices.

America therefore has sold an unusual amount of certain products at exceptionally high rates, with great commercial and financial advantage.

On the other hand, the scarcity of productive European labor, the demands of Europe for its own materials, the difficulties and dangers of transportation by sea have to a considerable extent excluded European products from the United States.

The European war, therefore, and the conditions which it has created should have brought unprecedented, even though impermanent, prosperity to the United States, and if the war has failed to do this because of the Democratic depression which it has had first to overcome, it has at any rate saved the country from the full disaster of the Democratic policy of reckless tariff reduction.

We have as yet, therefore, fortunately felt but little of free-trade disaster, and only such free-trade depression as must follow conditions of business disturbance, combined with the daze of uncertainty and the dread of impending injury.

Soon, however, the European war must end. Then the full effect of the Democratic policy of unscientific tariff reduction will fall upon our country.

We will then no longer have the enormous artificial demand for war supplies and food products which has partly sustained our industries, or, rather, which has sustained part of our industries during this war period.

We must then confront the unhappy condition of having our markets much more than ever open to European competition and our own products much less than ever in demand in European markets.

The Democratic administration might have obviated this destructive and depressing situation to a great extent by adopting a policy of reciprocity, by using the proposed modifications of our tariff and the resultant opening of our markets to foreign products as a lever to secure, by reciprocity treaties, the freedom of foreign markets to our products.

But the administration, unfortunately, did not have the business experience and judgment to see the advantage and advisability of such reciprocal relations.

The United States of America is the greatest business country in the world, but only occasionally has this great business country had anything approaching an intelligent business administration of its Government.

The present administration is no doubt well meaning enough, but it is impractical and inexperienced.

It is an administration of theories and vagaries, of prejudices and impulses, of incongruities and inconsistencies.

It is an administration of visionary policy, conceived in vanity and confirmed in fanatical obstinacy.

Reciprocity is a hundred-year-old Democratic doctrine.

Reciprocity was the especial plan of Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party.

Reciprocity has had the support and sanction of nearly every great Democratic leader who has led his party to sustained national success.

Reciprocity was the policy of the leaders of the recent Democratic Congresses to such an extent that when President Taft announced his conversion to reciprocity the Democratic leaders in Congress pledged him their support on the ground that "reciprocity was an accepted and established Democratic doctrine."

But this tried and proven Democratic policy has been discarded.

The recommendations of the Democratic leaders in Congress have been rejected.

The possibilities of overcoming the imminent dangers of unmitigated tariff reduction have neither been discerned nor embraced.

A policy of unreasoning tariff reduction has been adopted, with all its demonstrated industrial disturbances and eventual disasters, instead of that policy of reciprocity which would have obtained for our manufacturers the same advantages in foreign markets which we are extending to foreign manufacturers in our markets.

The wind was not tempered to the shorn industrial lambs, and, as a consequence, many of the most promising of the industrial flock have sickened, and some have died.

Our national yield of golden fleece from wealth-producing industries will be diminished to a proportionate degree. Our national resources in products and profits, in work and wages, will be decreased to a similar extent.

Not only individuals but the Nation has felt a lack of income, despite the artificial stimulus of war prices.

Thus taxes have been increased, although our ability to pay them is not as great as it once was.

And the end is not yet.

We have still to face the full and final results of Democratic folly and fatuity which will surely be upon us at the end of the European war.

Why, then, should the Democratic Party, now reassembled in Congress, not take advantage of the temporary respite which the war provides?

Why should the Democrats in Congress, and in the administration, too, if there be any there, not realize and admit that a tariff for revenue and for protection is not merely a Republican policy, it is an American policy?

It has been approved by the American people; it has been indorsed by history, fortified by fact, and sustained by experience.

Let the Democrats accept this well-proven policy and contrast the narrow and selfish Republican policy of protection for favored interests with the broader governmental and better business policy of just and judicious protection to increase our products at home and widespread reciprocity to extend our markets abroad.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

This is mighty sound advice to his Democratic brethren in Congress, and it contains much that any good Republican can enthusiastically indorse.

Indeed it shows pretty conclusively that we Republicans are correct in the contention that in the aggregate the European war has helped rather than harmed us, and that but for the curtailment of foreign competition and the increased demand for our products, resulting from the war, we would have fared far worse than we have. It emphasizes also the further fact that the American doctrine of protection is indispensable to the solvency of our Treasury and the prosperity of our people, and it shows that such prosperity as we now enjoy has been produced by the wall that the European war built around this country, which is higher than any tariff wall ever built. In other words, it is a complete vindication of the doctrine of protection. Of course the advice of Mr. Hearst will fall upon heedless Democratic ears, but, speaking for myself alone, I congratulate him upon the splendid Americanism and lofty statesmanship which his article displays.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. DARROW, on account of death in his family.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by H. L. Loucks on rural credit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by H. L. Loucks on rural credit. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, following the regular order of business, I may have one hour's time in which to discuss inland waterways.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent that on next Thursday at the close of the regular business he shall have one hour in which to address the House on the subject of inland waterways. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman mean by "the close of regular business"?

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose there will be some order of business on that day that will have privilege. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. We never run out of regular order of business here.

Mr. BORLAND. I will make it, then, at the close of the morning hour.

Mr. MANN. We have a special order for Thursday. Why does not the gentleman make it following the special order?

Mr. BORLAND. That was the intention.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for an hour next Thursday after the disposition of the Moon bill, which is pending business. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for a colleague. I desire to ask unanimous consent that immediately after the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has concluded his remarks the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS]—known as "Cyclone" DAVIS—be allowed one hour in which to address the House on the subject of rural credits. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], his colleague from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] be permitted to address the House for one hour on the subject of rural credits.

Mr. HENRY. And preparedness.

The SPEAKER. And preparedness, and so forth. [Laughter.] Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, when is this to be?

The SPEAKER. To be at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] on Thursday.

Mr. MANN. Suppose it should not come on Thursday, will that run over until Friday?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, was my request granted?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, I want to serve notice that there are some important bills on the calendar, and I think they ought to be taken up, and I will object to any more permissions to address the House at this time.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not give that notice, with two requests on that side already granted and when I am about to prefer one on this side of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am always ready to yield to a suggestion, but here is the situation: Next spring we shall all be trying to go home to our campaigns, and these days that are sought to be devoted to speeches ought to be used in getting the bills through.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Oklahoma objecting or not?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let me make a request. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, the gentleman from Washington may have one hour in which to address the House. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] will not object to that.

Mr. FERRIS. To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday and we expect to get our bill called up then.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it will come later. I do not wish to interfere with the consideration of the bill. That will be time enough, I think.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think the gentleman ought to ask that on Wednesday. That is a day when we have our only chance to get up our bills. But I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. What gentleman from Washington is it?

Mr. MANN. Mr. HUMPHREY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the transaction of the routine business, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] shall have an hour in which to address the House—upon what?

Mr. MANN. On the state of the Union. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. On the state of the Union. Is there objections? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing two addresses recently delivered at the Rivers and Harbors Congress in this city—one by Representative MOORE, of Pennsylvania, and one by Dock Commissioner Smith, of New York City.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing two speeches recently made at the River and Harbor Convention in this city, one by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and one by Dock Commissioner Smith, of New York. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, let me say, to the printing of the address made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], and I do not know that I shall object to the other, but it seems to me that there was some sort of a rule made here just before the holidays about printing those addresses that had been delivered at that Rivers and Harbors Convention, and objection was made to several separate requests on the theory that so many speeches had been delivered at that congress that it was impracticable to undertake to print them all in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It seems to me that if that proposition was laid down at that time and adhered to at that time it ought to be adhered to now. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] himself perhaps made that suggestion.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure whether it was I that made the suggestion or the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], but I know that we both believe it ought to be observed.

Mr. GARRETT. I have no objection to the printing of an address made by a Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. A Member of the House?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; a Member of the House, by Mr. MOORE, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] will separate his two requests.

Mr. BARNHART rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. BARNHART. To state briefly that there was an understanding, after due announcement was made, that a report of these speeches covering very largely the whole field to be covered would be undertaken, and that there would be no more of these speeches printed that were delivered. However, there were not a great many Members of the House present at the time. I want to join my colleague from Illinois and the gentleman from Tennessee in the position they take. Speeches by Members of Congress I will not object to, but I will object to the printing of speeches made by others, and I hope the gentleman from New York will separate his requests.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, of course I will divide my requests; but this address by the dock commissioner of New York will take, I will say, less than three-quarters of one column in the RECORD. In the presence of the present condition of New York Harbor in New York City this House is entitled to the information that is contained in the dock commissioner's statement, and therefore I hope that neither of the gentlemen will object.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman himself can give that information.

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman from New York if he deals with that particular thing and not with the general features?

Mr. BENNET. It is not the general condition. It was on the condition of the harbor of New York, and, as I recall it, it dealt very largely on the condition of the harbor and national preparedness. Therefore it seems to me it ought to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—H. R. 4737.

Mr. TAGGART rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. TAGGART. To ask for a change of reference of House bill 4737, which I introduced, for the purpose of extending the provisions of the pension laws to include the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Regiments of Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, a bill which by inadvertence was sent to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when it should have been referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Why should it be referred to the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. TAGGART. Those organizations did not serve in the Civil War, but in an Indian war.

The SPEAKER. Were the organizations made in the Civil War?

Mr. TAGGART. No; they did not serve in the Civil War.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but were they made in the Civil War?

Mr. TAGGART. No, sir, Mr. Speaker; they were organized some few years after the close of it.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard. Is this a public bill or a private bill?

Mr. TAGGART. It is a public bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 50 minutes on the subject of the national defense.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 50 minutes on the subject of the national defense. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, of course we will have horrors and horrors on account of this barbarous submarine warfare; but the worst that can happen is the severance of diplomatic relations with any and all Empires across the Atlantic wherein American citizens are murdered. But this does not mean war. On our southwestern border during the past two years 153 American citizens have been brutally murdered, not because they were on a ship carrying the flag of a belligerent or were found with a hostile army, but solely because they were American citizens, unarmed noncombatants.

All these unspeakable horrors did not happen in a hostile zone 3,000 miles away, but within 100 miles of our own borders. This submarine warfare is the most cowardly and barbarous of all warfare since the world began. And yet we are building a whole brood of submarines.

War is the greatest crime of the human race. It is not in my philosophy that if the murder of one man makes a villain, the murder of thousands makes a hero. It is in my philosophy that the hero of humane achievement in the uplift of his fellows transcends the hero of blood and iron and noise in a war of conquest. It is as true to-day as 87 years ago, when uttered by that greatest of Englishmen, Thomas Carlyle:

A standing army means waste, depression, and moral decay. No nation can improve its morals or grow in strength when its bravest and best sons are year by year devoured in the army.

This is the stand taken to-day by the sanest statesmen and ripest scholars of the age. A great student of ethics says: "The soul grows in the direction of its attention."

A nation, which is only the aggregation of individual souls, can not be moving toward peace while definitely preparing for war.

It is with the deepest regret that I am unable to agree with the President on his proposed plan of national defense. The President has rendered great service to the country by his superb diplomacy in keeping the country in the path of peace. He has had more difficult and perplexing problems to solve than any President since the adoption of our Federal Constitution, and his unflagging devotion to duty, his superb poise and masterful grasp of the many diplomatic problems, which he has settled in the interest of peace, entitle him to the lasting gratitude of all the people. I believe, however, that he has mistaken the popular judgment in his preparedness message. I believe the defeat of this scheme for extra taxation at this time, when the Federal Treasury is lank and lean, will command the approval and support of a majority of the people.

While I have been a peace man for over half a century, I have never been a peace-at-any-price devotee. Neither am I a member of any society or association for limiting national armament. I am not from Missouri, but before I vote to waste any more money to increase idle armies or top-heavy navies I want to know what emergency exists for such expenditure. [Applause.] Up to date none of the advocates of "preparedness" have given Congress or the people one valid reason why we should squander any more hard-earned tax money on militarism. Not one of this whole array of pretending patriots have pointed to an enemy either hostile to the United States or liable to attack the United States. Less than one year ago, when the armies of Europe were more powerful, more formidable, than now by at least 5,000,000 soldiers, the President and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy all took strong grounds, in public interviews and proclamations, that we were fully prepared for any emergency. This is so well known that I need not cumber the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with any quotations from their well-timed utterances of sanity and sense. Furthermore, the so-called experts of the Army and Navy less than one year ago fully fortified the attitude of both the President and his Cabinet on this vital question. At the hearings in the last session of Congress Gen. Erasmus M. Weaver, Chief of Coast Artillery, whose duty it is, he said, to "be advised as to the character and sufficiency of our seacoast armament," stated:

My information is that our system of fortification is reasonably adequate for all defensive purposes which they are likely to be called upon to meet.

And further said:

I have been a close student of the whole subject, naturally, for a number of years, and I know of no fortifications in the world, as far as my reading, observation, and knowledge goes, that compare favorably in efficiency with ours.

Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, considered one of the greatest experts in the country on fortifications and guns, said:

In my opinion, these guns, with other advantages which our land-defense fortifications have, will be adequate for maintaining a successful combat with vessels of war armed with any gun which is now under construction anywhere in the world to my knowledge.

A very distinguished statesman of the Republican Party, late a candidate for President and a close student of continental events, gives the country the benefit of his investigation as to the origin of this colossal military propaganda. I quote from La Follette's Magazine, which has not yet been sued for libel:

Who are the real patriots of the country? They are the glorious group of multimillionaires who are making such enormous profits out of the European war as were never before realized in the same brief period since time began. They are the Morgans, the Rockefellers, the Schwabs, the Garys, the du Ponts, and their prototypes, who are back of the 38 corporations most benefited by war orders, the stocks of which have increased more than a thousand million dollars above their highest market value before the war. They are the dollar-scarred heroes who organized the Navy League of the United States. Shades of Lincoln! What a band of patriots, with their business connections covering every financial and industrial center in the United States! Owning newspapers, periodicals, and magazines and controlling through business relations the editorial good will of many others, they will be able to render powerful but disinterested aid in the great propaganda for preparedness now flooding the country.

The bold Wisconsin editor and statesman gives us an adequate idea of the original source of the viperous hellbroth of threatening war now sending its malignant poison through war-scare journals and magazines into the hearts and homes of thousands of well-meaning, timid Americans.

Congress, under the Constitution, is the only power competent to declare war. If there is any enemy in sight or likely to attack the United States, it is the sole duty of Congress to take the initiative; and the power to declare war implies the power to make all preparations for war. Article I, section 8, of the original Constitution, also states that Congress shall have power to provide for the common defense. Hence it follows that Congress has the sole power not only to declare war, but to provide for the common defense, and Congress will be held strictly to account by the people in the coming November for any ill-timed or unnecessary laws, whether enacted through fear of an impossible enemy or because a powerful and greed-hungry cabal demanded the sacrifice. No individual Member of Congress can shift the responsibility for his vote on this the most vital question of the hour upon either the President or his Cabinet.

In all our history, from the first proclamation of the Federal Constitution, signed by George Washington as President, September 17, 1787, until now, no political party, no leading statesman or leading publicist has ever before advocated a great standing Army and Navy in time of peace. Whenever we are liable to be confronted with an armed enemy I will vote for as many armed men and as much money as the President may demand; and, furthermore, I will volunteer as a soldier to go to the front, which is more than any of this powerful array of culpable curmudgeons, who originated this horrid war scare, will ever do. [Applause.]

It is now up to this Congress to decide whether all the sacred history of the past, sacred because humane and successful for over a hundred years of undisturbed peace, shall continue to endure in the purpose and hope of its founders, or whether we shall enter the devious path of world-power exploitation. Militarism and imperialism are a couplet of devious devils that will carry the American people on the down grade speedily. You can not separate militarism from imperialism. To use an unclerical expression, they are twin devils of rapacity and moral decay—useless one without the other. Like the Siamese twins of long-time memory, they are coursed with the same blood, and if you cut the umbilical cord both will languish and die. [Applause.]

Here is what George Allen England says of this humbug scare, misnamed "preparedness":

The whole thing is perfectly obvious. Seizing upon the European butchery as an excuse, the armament makers and militarists are determined to drive this country over the brink if they can. They remain indifferent to all truisms such as that "preparedness" has not prevented but has always induced war. There is money in this thing for them: so down with old age pensions, educational expansion, improvements of all kinds, and hurrah for Moloch. Militarism is a quick cut to millions. Moloch, militarism, murder, massacre—I think that sums it all up with neatness and dispatch.

The Toledo Blade, of my district, the oldest daily journal in northwestern Ohio of the Republican faith, says:

SHERWOOD stands alone among the Ohio delegation on the preparedness program.

While this is evidently a mistake, I should not feel lonesome or discouraged were it true. Not long ago the Ohio State Journal, another old-time Republican paper, published in the State capital, printed an editorial with the following closing paragraph:

We wish Ohio could take a positive stand for peace in the Halls of Congress. It has not done so. There is only one man who has represented his constituents faithfully upon this matter, and that is Gen. SHERWOOD, of the Toledo district. He has sounded the true note every time.

Well, I have been alone before. The bill of May 13, 1908, to build a harbor of safety and a dry dock at Pearl Harbor in the Sandwich Islands, a bill providing for spending over $3,000,000, invoked much skyrocket oratory on the floor of the House. There was fear of a formidable raid on our Pacific coast by Japan. One of the leading orators of this eventful day was Capt. Hobson, of Alabama. He convinced the alert-eared Members that Japan was about to attack the United States and assume warlike control of the great Pacific Ocean, and without this ocean control America would be lost. The measure passed the House with a hurrah—229 yeas to 1 no, as I remember. On a roll call I was the only Member voting against it. The tally clerk, out of sheer pity, came to me and said, "You are the only one voting 'no'; I thought you had made a mistake." Let us see.

Our biggest battleships have a water displacement of 26 feet and the entrance to Pearl Harbor has only a depth, as I learn, of about 15 feet, and the bottom is coral rock. Hence, if we should happen to have a war with Japan and a naval conflict should occur 2,000 miles from the Pacific coast and one or more of our battleships should be disabled and should seek safety in Pearl Harbor, it would hardly be able to skim through 15 feet of water depth with a battleship of 26 feet water displacement. Amount expended for dredging to date, $3,296,000. And yet the original foolhardly Pearl Harbor preparedness was as well grounded in sanity and sense as the present plan of "preparedness" and not so expensive by some $445,000,000.

SOME STAGGERING FIGURES.

For the 10 years preceding the European war we had expended on our Navy over $300,000,000 more than Germany or any other nation except Great Britain.

These estimates almost stagger belief; and yet this is not all the advocates of "preparedness" demand. If carried into national law, it means national bankruptcy; of course, the swift ruin of the Democratic Party, if a majority votes for this stupendous, uncalled-for extravagance. There is sure to be a healthy change of heart when the facts are known among all classes of patriotic, peace-loving American citizens. Very few persons who are talking about "preparedness" have any adequate idea of the immense tax burden involved, not only for this year but for all the coming years. Here are the staggering figures, all to be provided for in a new tax bill:

The five-year naval program calls for an increase of $500,000,000—$100,000,000 increase a year—which, including the expenses for expanding the whole naval establishment, will reach $600,000,000 or over by the time the five years expire. This is all extra—in addition to the large appropriations we are now making for our idle, top-heavy Navy. The Army four-year program demands $450,000,000 increase, over $100,000,000 a year extra, being an increase of more than 100 per cent over our annual Army appropriations. All extra appropriations. At the expiration of the five-year period for the program this country will then be expending on its Army and Navy more than any nation in the world in times of peace ever expended.

In 1891 the Navy had 1,483 officers, exclusive of 239 naval cadets at the Naval Academy. The number of enlisted men allowed in 1891 was 8,250, and the amount appropriated that year was $24,610,501. In 1915 the officers numbered 3,403, the naval cadets numbered 912, the enlisted men numbered 52,561, and the amount appropriated was $145,734,163. In other words, we now have a little more than twice as many officers as in 1891, more than three times as many naval cadets, more than six times as many enlisted men, and nearly six times as large an appropriation. We have now the second strongest Navy in the world, with no enemy in sight and nothing to do but waste powder in target practice, concoct war scares, and give tone and polish to our flamboyant Washington society. [Laughter and applause.] "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress," as Gen. Ethan Allen remarked at the gates of Fort Ticonderoga, what has become of that vital plank of the Baltimore national platform pledging the Democratic Party to economy and the abolition of useless offices? [Applause.]

What does the greatest living soldier in the United States think of this continental enlistment scheme recommended by the Secretary of War? I refer to Gen. Nelson A. Miles, a soldier who commanded an army corps in the Army of the Potomac when only 25 years of age—not only a gallant and conspicuous general with a four years' battle service in our great Civil War, but noted as the most successful Indian fighter in the after-war period. Gen. Miles has visited and inspected the army of every one of the great powers of Europe and has more expert knowledge of war's machinery than any soldier or war specialist in the United States. Of course, Gen. Miles is against the scheme. He seems to think the scheme did not originate with the Secretary of War, but was concocted in our so-called War College. The War College, as we remember, was the favorite militant child of Col. Roosevelt when he was President. Hence the scheme has a wild and woolly flavor. [Applause and laughter.]

The National Guard is almost unanimously opposed to this kind of preparedness. In the recent national convention of the National Guard in San Francisco, after hearing a powerful letter read from the Secretary of War, and hearing a fervid oration by the eloquent Assistant Secretary of War Breckenridge, the convention turned down the continental proposition. The same action was taken by the State convention of the Ohio National Guard held later in Cincinnati.

In further contention as to our ample preparedness for war, let me state that during the last 17 years 381,312 men have been enlisted, and these with the number in the Army would make a total of more than 400,000 men that have passed through the drill, instruction, and discipline of the military service. Approximately the same number have received military instruction in the National Guard. Added to these figures, there are between two and three millions of men in our country that have passed through all the drill, discipline, and instruction of European armies, and who are now, in the main, earnest, patriotic citizens of the great Republic. Approximately 25,000 young men are graduating every year from our colleges and institutions where military instruction is given. I am indebted to Gen. Miles for these vital statistics.

During the last 30 years the Government has expended nearly $176,000,000 on our seacoast defenses, and the result at Cairo, Port Arthur, and the Dardanelles is sufficient evidence that guns on board ship are no match for coast fortifications and submarine mines. Within the control of the National Government and States there are at least 1,000,000 serviceable rifles. Our gun and ammunition factories are manufacturing daily at least 5,000,000 cartridges and will soon be capable of manufacturing 50,000 artillery shells. In fact, there is now being constructed in our country daily more war material than any two armies now warring against each other in Europe are using in the same time. Hence the alarming clamor about our unpreparedness is criminal foolishness. It should fool no grown-up person outside of an idiotic asylum. [Laughter and applause.]

HOW THE FARMERS STAND.

The farmers in my district are everywhere reported against "preparedness." The State Grange of Ohio, recently in session in Elyria, declared against it. I noticed the Farmers' Union of North Carolina, 50,000 strong, declared against it. I am in receipt of the leading farm journal, the National Field, of December 2, the national organ of the Farmers' Alliance. It prints a very strong editorial, covering two entire pages, giving cogent reasons why farmers everywhere should be against this unnecessary extravagance. I have numerous letters from representative farmers, from the Middle West and Far West, all against preparedness. A letter from A. M. Criswell, president Farmers' Alliance, Biddleton, State of Washington, says:

We held a large farmers union last night and took a vote on Wilson's "preparedness," or rather on the defense bill, and not a vote was in favor of that plan.

William Madison Hicks, Oolagah, Okla., under date of November 23, writes:

I was at Coweta last Saturday and delivered an address on the plan of the President for "preparedness," and the whole country seemed to be aroused against the military scheme. The citizens, without regard to political preferment, openly indorsed the stand taken by Hon. W. J. Bryan on this issue. The citizens at Chelsea, White Hill, Sperry, and Sageeyah have openly condemned, but the great dailies refuse to let the country know what we are doing. In southeast Kansas in the last 10 days and in southwest Missouri in the same time, 53 public mass meetings have been held condemning the President's plan, and yet not one of these resolutions have found its way into print.

Col. Frank G. Yeoman, a veteran soldier and leading Democrat of Milledgeville, Ill., writes that his business has taken him over Carroll County, and finds that not 10 per cent of either party favor the so-called preparedness scheme. A. W. Lewis, of Berkeley, Cal., a student and writer on social and economic reform, writes as follows:

This is the hour when true men must arise and be numbered. Ascertain if this malign influence for a big military establishment emanates from the noble spirit of American manhood, or from those who are solely animated from the mean spirit of selfishness and greed.

THE LABOR UNIONS AGAINST.

The labor unions in my district are against "preparedness." At a called meeting of the Central Labor Union of Toledo, representing 10,000 organized workers and 91 locals, a resolution was passed, without one dissenting vote, against the "preparedness" scheme. Here is a specimen resolution passed by the machinist union, the largest local in Toledo:

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS,
Toledo, Ohio, November 16, 1915.

At the last regular meeting of Lodge 105 the lodge, consisting of over 1,600 members, went on record as opposed to a larger Army or Navy, the vote being unanimous against it.

EARL H. DEANE,
Recording Secretary.

Here let me quote an extract from a signed statement made by our able, experienced, and alert leader, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]:

In the face of the fact that we have a Navy superior to that of Germany or any other nation, except that of Great Britain; in the face of the fact that our Navy is growing larger, stronger, and better equipped than ever before; in the face of the fact, as the President declared both in his message to Congress December last and in his recent Manhattan Club speech, "We are threatened from no quarter," the proposed "preparedness" program at one bound—one year—increases our already immensely large naval appropriations more than our total increase for the last 14 years, more than the increase by Germany the whole 15 years preceding the European war, and more than the combined increase of all the nations in the world in any one year in their history (in times of peace). The five-year program proposed increases our naval appropriation over forty times more than the increase by Germany in five years preceding the European war and $200,000,000 more than the combined increase of all the nations of the world for the five years preceding the European war, and over $50,000,000 more than the combined increase of all the nations in the world for the whole period of 10 years immediately preceding the European war. Add to this the fact that prior to the beginning of the European war we were expending annually on our Navy from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 more than Germany or any other nation, except Great Britain.

Evidently the average citizen, who has been scared into the advocacy of so-called "preparedness," has been misled by reading in the war-scare newspapers and armor-plate magazines that we are utterly unprepared. This is a slander on both our Army and our Navy. And it is untrue, unfair, and unpatriotic. We have the strongest Navy in the world for all defensive purposes in our own waters; and in education, in deportment, in discipline and efficiency, we have the best naval officers in the world. And our Army officers in discipline and deportment and efficiency will compare favorably with the officers of any army anywhere on either continent.

I have no criticism of either the Army or the Navy. My objection is not to quality or efficiency, but to quantity. We need no big military establishment in this Republic. As Cardinal Gibbons very wisely says, we are protected east and west by two great oceans, a protection far more formidable than forts or cannon or navies; and our people, already overtaxed, can not stand the burden of an increased military establishment already too costly.

At the beginning of the European war Germany was expending for past wars and preparations for wars—on its army and navy—55 per cent of the total amount of revenues collected; Japan, 45 per cent; Great Britain, 37 per cent; France, 35 per cent; the United States, over 60 per cent. With the proposed military and naval program enacted into law the United States will be expending over 70 per cent of its total revenues; that is, out of every $100 collected from the people over $70 will go into militarism and navalism and vampireism to mark the ruin of the Republic of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln.

SOME ILLUMINATING HISTORY.

On the question of national armament I take my stand with Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence and father of the Democratic Party. [Applause.] In 1799 Thomas Jefferson wrote Elbridge Gerry as follows:

I am for relying for internal defense on our militia solely till actual invasion, and for such a naval force only as will protect our coast harbors from depredations, and not for a standing army in time of peace which may overcome the public sentiment, nor a navy which by its own expenses and the external wars in which it may implicate us will grind us with public burdens and sink us under them.

Here is a fateful admonition for this hour. Jefferson made the protest against the standing army of England the most vital paragraph in the Declaration of Independence. In all the grievances protested against in that immortal document the standing army, as a menace to the peace and prosperity of the Colonies, was mentioned in three separate paragraphs, while every other grievance was mentioned but once.

Let me cite some illuminating history on the preparedness of 95 years ago. In December, 1823, President Monroe issued his memorable message embodying what is now known as the Monroe doctrine. This message was a bold defi and challenge to the three great powers of Europe, known as the Holy Alliance. This Holy Alliance was a league formed in September, 1815, after the Battle of Waterloo had sent Napoleon into exile. It was formed by Alexander the First of Russia, Emperor Francis of Austria, William the Third of Prussia, and indorsed by nearly all the second-class powers of Europe. This Holy Alliance was formed to preserve monarchical absolutism in Europe, and secondarily to see to it that no member of the Bonaparte family should ever occupy any throne in Europe. That President Monroe issued his famous message embodying the Monroe doctrine against any interference by this alliance is a well-established fact. Prof. Peck, in his new International Encyclopedia, says:

The most noteworthy attempt of this Holy Alliance was to extend its operation to the New World by the coercion of Spain's revolting colonies.

President Monroe's message was a challenge to the whole formidable array of Old World monarchies, far more defiant and sweeping that Jefferson's defi to Great Britain July 4, 1776. How about our preparedness then? We had only 10,000 soldiers in the Regular Army, including infantry, artillery, and riflemen. And how about our Navy? We had 7 wooden battleships, 9 small frigates, 2 corvettes—low sloops with one tier of guns—5 sloops, 2 brigs, and 5 small schooners, 30 war craft all told. And how many sea dogs of war did we have then? Let us see. We had 30 captains, 30 master commandants, 9 chaplains, 356 midshipmen, 53 sailing masters, 16 boatswains, and 18 gunners—all told only 512, besides the lieutenants, quartermasters, and Army surgeons. What was the entire population of the United States at that critical period—1823? By the census of 1820 we had, including Indians, 9,633,822. How much did our Navy cost us in 1823? Nine hundred and twenty-nine thousand five hundred and three dollars all told. Did the Monroe doctrine precipitate war? No. We had 3,000 miles of deep ocean between us and any possible enemy in the Old World. That same ocean still rolls between, and we have now 100,000,000 instead of less than 10,000,000 in 1820. Who is afraid? No one with self-poise or ordinary horse sense or courage sufficient to be a citizen of America. [Applause.]

I desire to call the attention of the advocates of "preparedness" to a very valuable pamphlet just issued by Anson Phelps Stokes, secretary of the Yale University. Let me quote from the closing paragraph:

If the United States tries to frighten Europe by her armaments, her distrust of us and her misinterpreting of our motives will lead to deep suspicions and hatred, and these are the things that surely breed war. Knowing that "armed peace" has proved a sham and delusion in Europe, why should not our Nation be willing to take risks for real peace in the interest of a world tired of the cruelties and horrors of war?

HYSTERIA OF 1812.

We had a very disastrous fit of hysteria in 1812, resulting in our second war with Great Britain. Some of our historians charge Henry Clay, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, with fomenting this hysteria. Let me quote what one of the greatest statesmen of the antebellum period said of that war. I refer to Senator Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts. I quote from a memorable oration delivered by Sumner in 1845:

The fruitlessness and vanity of war appear in the results of the great wars by which the world has been lacerated. After long struggles, in which each nation has inflicted and received incalculable injury, peace has been gladly obtained on the basis of the condition of things before the war. Let me refer, for an example, to our last war with Great Britain, the professed object of which was to obtain from the latter power and renunciation of her claim to impress our seamen. The greatest number of American seamen ever officially alleged to be compulsory serving in the British Navy was about 800. To overturn this injustice, the whole country was doomed for more than three years to the accursed blight of war. Our commerce was driven from the seas; resources of the land were drained by taxation; villages on the Canadian frontier were laid in ashes; the metropolis of the Republic was captured; the White House burned, while gaunt distress raged everywhere within our borders. Weary with this rude trial, our Government appointed commissioners to treat for peace, under these instructions: "Your first duty will be to conclude peace with Great Britain, and you are authorized to do it."

That is, we had some 2,000 soldiers killed, twice as many more maimed, and involved the country in an enormous debt, and then made a peace compact with Great Britain which left the impressment of our American seamen unsettled, or just where it was before the war.

THE COSTLY HYSTERIA OF 1898.

We had another violent and costly fit of military hysteria in 1898. It is now known that Cuba could have been freed without war against Spain and without shedding one drop of the blood of an American soldier. After this brief but costly war we paid Spain, a whipped nation, twenty millions for a vast group of islands, 10,000 miles away in the tropical Orient, when Spain had neither possession nor control. In fact, Spain had nothing to sell except the royal prerogative of her boy King Alfonso. We parted with our twenty millions for a tablet upon which to write the epitaph of the Republic of Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln.

The Baltimore platform pledges the Democratic Party to immediate action on the Philippine problem. Lest we forget, I quote from that platform:

We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established.

As the Philippine Islands are both a menace and a burden and have cost us to date over one thousand millions of worse than wasted money and the lives of over 16,000 soldiers and a pension list of over thirty-five millions, why not recognize now, as a measure of national defense, that solemn promise in our national platform? [Applause.] We could then bring back some 13,000 seasoned and experienced soldiers to join our Army at home. It would also lift the white man's burden in the tropical Orient and shorten our battle line some 10,000 miles should Japan seek to dominate the Pacific Ocean. We would save about forty millions of money, now wasted yearly in the Philippines, and save also the dangerous menace of passing another emergency tax bill in the immediate presence of a presidential campaign.

Seriously, is this not more important and vital than following the lead of a mercenary coterie of murderous shrapnel and munition makers, who are coining unholy millions in the blood of innocents across the Atlantic? [Applause.] Nearly all our recognized leaders of social ethics, nearly all our great humanitarians and teachers are against this preparedness business. You can count the defenders of this wicked folly among our great teachers of moral and economic reform on the fingers of your two hands.

It is proposed to tax a patient and tolerant people, already overtaxed, that an overpowering army of idlers may be endowed to consume the savings of the industrial classes, increasing the already high cost of living, and producing nothing but discontent and trouble. It is a crime against the Republic. It is without sanity, without sense, and withoue excuse. And the same brood of blood-money gangsters are recommending a buzzard brood of aeroplanes. The devil of late has learned to deal destruction and death from the sky. His victims have been mostly women and children and babes. And the devil's allies now clamor for this latest and most barbarous of all war's brutalities as a part of the military outfit of this so-called Christian Republic. Furthermore, of what possible use can we ever have of aeroplanes, either to resist or aggressively fight an enemy with 3,000 miles of ocean between?

OLD-AGE PENSIONS.

Instead of increasing our standing army, already costing the taxpayers over one hundred millions a year, I favor reducing it one-half, to 50,000 men. This would probably save close to fifty millions per year. I would use an adequate sum to improve and strengthen our National Guard, which, should war ever come, will prove our chief reliance. I would set apart, say, ten millions as a starter for old-age pensions to the worthy workers, the wealth producers in our busy hives of industry. Nothing would do such valuable service in healing the constant conflicts between capital and labor as a humane system of old-age pensions, such as Prince Bismarck inaugurated in the German Empire. Not only would this benign alleviation of the woes of the workers heal the antagonism now so apparent in labor strikes, but it would be an inspiration of patriotism to every worthy worker in the United States. Our flag would then be a hope and a symbol of helpfulness, saying to every son of toil, Be true, be faithful to your trust, and when old age comes on apace this flag with the shining stars will be your protector, and a grateful Nation will help you to make your last days on earth comfortable and full of gratitude. As a matter of national defense it would be a cognate inspiration to every worker. Under this proposed system of economic reform and patriotic preparedness we could use ten millions to inaugurate a humane system of old-age pensions, and spend five millions in perfecting the National Guard, and then save thirty-five millions of our present Army budget. This would relieve our weary Ways and Means Committee of much wearing worry and prove a balm and a sweet solace to the great troubled army of overtaxed taxpayers. And the ten millions would give 100,000 old-age pensions at $100 per year. This money would all go into circulation and prove a potent element in the education of the men and women who do the world's work that this Republic is not ungrateful.

OUR COAST DEFENSES.

Probably some anxious taxpayers will ask, When and why was this extensive coast-defense system started? It was in 1885, in order to make a generous way to spend more money. Have any of these big guns ever been called upon to fire at an enemy? No; not one, in all the 30 years; and furthermore, there may never be an enemy in sight for 30 years more. And when this self-same taxpayer, who has been reading in the big newspapers and magazines that our coasts are without defense, finds from the official reports that we have spent on coast defense since 1885 the enormous sum of $175,973,699, he is liable to conclude that there is a vast array of continental liars in this preparedness game.

VIEWS OF OUR GREAT LEADERS.

Ex-Senator Root, of New York, master mind on the question of international law, was the leading speaker before the Pan American Congress in this city on December 28. I quote a significant paragraph from his address:

Some of us believe that the hope of the world's progress lies in the spread and perfection of democratic self-government. It may be that out of the rack and welter of the great conflict may arise a general consciousness that it is the people who are to be considered, their rights and liberties to govern and be governed for themselves, rather than rulers' ambitions and policies of aggrandizement.

This is surely a covert punch in the ribs of that powerful group of war exploiters in Gotham who value blood-coined dollars as more vital than orderly democratic self-government. [Applause.]

At the same session of the Pan American Congress Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, of Cornell University, predicted the settlement of future controversies by arbitration. Force as a moral means of settling controversies, he said, had failed.

At the much-exploited Clark conference at Worcester, Mass., December 18 last, Norman Angell, author of The Great Illusion and other works, whose topic was "America's need for preparedness in policy," said:

America, simmering with the new-raised doctrine of preparedness, is heading straight toward war, unless she formulates before building up her armament a definite policy to tell the world what she proposes to do with her military and naval forces. America is putting a premium on naval rivalry rather than on right or wrong by this brand of neutrality.

On the 8th of November last I received a letter dated New York from the highest class group of scholars, humanitarians, and sociologists in the United States. This letter bore this precious patriotic motto as a guiding principle:

The American League to Limit Armaments is organized to combat militarism and the spread of the militaristic spirit in the United States.

The Rev. Washington Gladden, the leading Protestant minister of Ohio in the broad domain of civics, a recognized teacher of sociology, is preaching powerful sermons against this military propaganda.

Even in this wicked city of Washington, where the newspapers are all one way, there is a healthy and growing sentiment against this military propaganda. We have a well-organized peace society, a rational defense league, opposed to war, and an antimilitary organization, all composed of influential men and women. Here is a letter from Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., dated December 31, 1915, from the Social Study Club. This club is composed of 10 scientists, a leading minister, a charity worker, and a War Department official. After a full debate, the vote stood 3 in favor and 8 against the military program of the administration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have time to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. As this is not a political question, I have sent letters, which have been published in my district, asking for instructions from my constituents how to vote on this vital matter. I have not received one solitary letter, telegram, or verbal message asking me to vote for this colossal extravagance. It is due to say, however, that there is a National Defense League in Toledo composed of 10 or 12 high-class citizens.

I also have a petition, signed by 275 high-class scholars and leaders of the best thought in New York City and vicinity, all for peace and against the barbarism of war preparedness.

I must not fail to mention the superb attitude of that profound thinker and venerated prelate, Cardinal Gibbons. The views of Cardinal Gibbons with reference to what is commonly designated as "adequate preparedness" are well worth earnest and thoughtful consideration. His world knowledge is vast and comprehensive. His devotion to the highest American ideals is known to every man and woman of intelligence in the United States. In an authorized interview December 2, 1915, Cardinal Gibbons said:

> There is no need for America as a Nation to be alarmed or hysterically apprehensive of war. We are the safest Nation on the face of the earth, so far as locality goes. Providence has been kind to us. He has placed us where we are, protected by nature from the incursions of an enemy. On the east we have the ocean barrier of the Atlantic. On the west the Pacific protects us. To the north we have the quiet Canadians. As for the South, there is no danger of an invasion either on the part of Mexico or the South American countries. For this reason I would be sorry to see an immense standing army organized in this country. For one hundred and twenty-odd years we have prospered with a comparatively small army, relying upon the justice of our position for our protection. I do not see why we should be apprehensive at this time—certainly not on account of any European power. They are now well-nigh exhausted, and they certainly would not attack us.

At the close of our great Civil War Gen. Grant, then the foremost soldier of the modern world, approved the muster out of all the Volunteers and reducing our standing army to 25,000 men. There was a powerful and aggressive element in the North clamoring for a war with England. During the war Confederate cruisers, built in English shipyards and armed in English arsenals, had driven American commerce from the seas and oceans of the world, but President Grant favored the Geneva court of arbitration.

Morley, in his life of Gladstone, says:

> The treaty of Washington and the Geneva arbitration stand out as the most notable victories in the nineteenth century in the noble art of preventive diplomacy and the most signal exhibition of self-command in two or three of the great powers of the Western World.

At Appomattox Grant stood on fame's topmost pinnacle, the foremost man in all the world, but in the Geneva award he was greater than at Appomattox. [Applause.]

I remember, in 1868, going through the old Ashtabula district of Ohio with Gen. James A. Garfield, afterwards President, then starting on his remarkable civil career. I remember the applause which greeted his peroration in approving the muster-out of that great Army of volunteers, in which he stated that—

> We need no large standing army in this country. We are a Republic where every citizen is a beneficiary of the Government. In Europe government rests upon force, and every laboring man is carrying a soldier on his back. In the German Empire the spiked helmet is supreme, but in the United States of America government rests upon the hearts and hands and homes of all the people.

I can not believe that all of Gen. Garfield's splendid idealism is gone. Let us hope not. I hope the time is coming and is near at hand when all this brass-toned hysteria over militarism and ocean domination will cease. When I think of the serenity and virility of American patriotism a half century ago, when great soldiers like Grant and statesmen of the deep humanities like Garfield were the leaders, compared with the truckling servility to organized barbarity now, I feel like quoting a couplet from our own poet, Howard S. Taylor:

> We have forgot! A Roman lust
> Profanes our ancient holy things.
> We trample justice in the dust:
> We have the rabies of the kings,
> The scarlet rage of gun and sword.
> Have mercy on thy people, Lord.

We are to-day at peace with all the world. Why should we prepare for war when we have never had a war in over a century and a quarter of national life that was not of our own seeking? No nation on either side of the Atlantic has ever attacked us when we were numerically weak. How utterly idiotic is the idea that any European nation now, exhausted in fighting men, with business and industry paralyzed, with commerce driven from the seas and oceans of the world; loaded down with a debt that staggers belief, with the land filled with millions of widows and five times as many fatherless children, with 6,000,000 maimed and crippled soldiers—the legless, the armless, the insane, and the sightless, who have escaped from the damp pits of the trenches and the lurid hell of battle—all dependents on the Empire for all their weary lives; that this Empire is going to make an impossible crossing of 3,000 miles of deep ocean with an army that it is impossible to either equip or transport; that this phantom army is going to attack 100,000,000 of people in the United States, between whom there is no quarrel, is the most preposterous proposition that was ever exploited since the cave man of the prehistoric age was in the first stages of evolution. [Laughter.]

We are at peace with all the world. Let us strive, as becomes the citizens of a Christian nation, to make that peace permanent and perpetual. Let us put aside all thoughts of gun and sword as unworthy our traditions and history and look to a future wherein the flag of our shining stars of States shall be a beacon light beckoning our people to peaceful pursuits and social and moral betterment. The great present, with its glowing zeal for humanity, with a culture deepened and broadened by science and enriched by all history, with its strong-winged soul of prophecy hot and glowing with the blood beats a realized brotherhood of man claims us and calls us to stand by the ancient faith. [Applause.]

Let us pray, and labor with our prayers, that this hour of military hysteria will speedily pass, and that the sword and the man on horseback shall never frustrate the true mission and destiny of our beloved America—peace, progress, and prosperity under the supreme guidance of constitutional law. [Applause.]

THE LATE JUSTICE LAMAR.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes to announce the death of Mr. Justice Lamar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the subject of the death of Mr. Justice Lamar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, this House, the State of Georgia, and the entire Nation as well have heard with profound sorrow of the death of Justice Lamar. Justice Lamar was born and reared on a farm in Elbert County, in the district I have the honor to represent.

It can be said of him truthfully the high position of judge of the Supreme Court of the United States sought him and that he did not seek the position. He had no political aspirations. He was called from private life to the position of honor he occupied. Before filling the high position on the Supreme Court of the United States he was appointed by the governor of Georgia to the supreme court of that State and was reelected without opposition, but shortly thereafter resigned on account of ill health. He then engaged in the practice of law for a term of years. While sojourning in Augusta, Ga., a few days that great jurist, President Taft, became acquainted with Justice Lamar and the acquaintance ripened into close friendship. President Taft marked him as a man of judicial temperament, judicial mind, and talents. A vacancy occurred on the Supreme Bench, and while President Taft was besieged with many applications from all over the United States through friends of the applicants, his mind went back to Georgia and firmly settled upon this Georgia lawyer. To satisfy his own mind of the competency of Judge Lamar he sent for the Georgia Reports and personally examined decisions rendered by Judge Lamar, thereby satisfying himself overwhelmingly that this Georgia lawyer was the man for the position. President Taft then conferred upon Justice Lamar not only this great honor, but he honored the State of Georgia by laying aside party lines and appointing this great jurist and Democrat. Justice Lamar did not seek the position on the supreme bench of Georgia; the governor appointed him in recognition of his ability. Justice Lamar did not seek the position as Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States; the President of the United States sought Justice Lamar and tendered him the position. Justice Lamar had retired from the bench of Georgia on account of ill health, never intending to return to public life, but he felt duty bound to accept this position voluntarily tendered him by the President of his country.

Justice Lamar served with distinction to himself and honor to the great State of Georgia, which he represented. All men spoke well of Justice Lamar, and no man spoke evil of him. He was a man of great personality and left a strong impress upon all with whom he came in contact. The members of the Georgia bar who knew him loved him, and the same is true of the lawyers who met him in Washington.

During the early spring he had a slight stroke of paralysis, caused by overwork. There was never a more conscientious and hard worker than Justice Lamar. There are no mistakes in his decisions. He never left a case incomplete and no errors can be charged to his record.

It had been his custom to make an annual trip to the old homestead at Ruckersville, and he had shown considerable anxiety to make that trip during the summer of this year. He even went to the extent of announcing to his friends at Ruckersville the date of his anticipated return, but he has not been able to go back to the scenes of his childhood since his illness in the spring.

Two weeks ago, when he returned to Washington from White Sulphur Springs, he was able to return to the Capitol and make short journeys around Washington. He contracted cold and for two weeks he had been gradually sinking, and finally passed away as one falling asleep.

The memory of Justice Lamar will live forever in the history of Georgia and this Nation as one of the greatest jurists of the country, and one who did not seek political preferment but was called on account of his superior ability. Soon his remains will be carried to the South to rest in the old red hills of Georgia, the State he honored and loved so well.

THE LATE GOV. HAMMOND, OF MINNESOTA.

Mr. HENRY and Mr. ELLSWORTH rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House upon the death of Gov. Winfield Scott Hammond, of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House on the life, character, and death of Gov. Hammond, of Minnesota. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I heard of the shocking death of the late governor of Minnesota in the Southland. I saw the newspaper accounts of the splendid courtesy that was shown in bringing his remains through Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Kentucky under escort of the governors of those Southern States; and as I pictured in my mind's eye, as I could so well, being a native of the little town in which he was buried but yesterday afternoon, the sadness that overtook my native State of Minnesota, and when I realized that as the sun went down yesterday afternoon it was to a million people the saddest day in the history of the State, I felt that some recognition of that event should be had in this Chamber. He served four terms in this body, in the Sixtieth, the Sixty-first, Sixty-second, and Sixty-third Congresses. He was a modest man, and I believe that I state a plain fact when I say that not many, except his old neighbors in his home in southern Minnesota, realized and appreciated the virtues of this truly great man.

As a neighbor he was painstaking, unselfish, generous to a fault; as a man, a patriot, and respecter of the truth; as a citizen, always loyal, patriotic, and public spirited; a lawyer who always tried causes upon their merits, and not a stickler for technicalities. As an official he was ever zealous to perform the duties of his public trust in any and every position which he held. As a political antagonist he was a man whose indignation, once aroused, went out against the opposition and made them feel the very power of his personality and the wisdom of his forceful eloquence; and, when the campaign was over and the turmoil was cleared away, a man who could clasp you by the hand and be the same kind, considerate neighbor that he was in the beginning.

The dominating characteristic, though, was his modesty, and of that particularity I want to speak. He was modest to a fault. The last man in the little town of St. James, a little city of 2,000 people, in the southern part of the State of Minnesota, to assert himself on any public occasion, no matter whether he occupied the humble position of city attorney in the little city or the attorney of the little county, a small county in that part of the State, or Congressman of his district or governor of the State, upon any occasion—Winfield Scott Hammond, if there was a public occasion in the little city or village, was found sitting in the rear with his hands folded, speculating upon some perhaps little inconsiderable part of the event. He was the kind of a man that if you pointed to the sturdy oak, instead of expostulating on its great branches and its rugged roots which protruded from the ground, he would see in it the little tentacles or fibers at the end which took the sap of life; he would see the veins that took the sap into the twigs and leaves and stems—the little things that went to make up the great whole; and such was his life, a man of modest environment, of unpretentious thought, who brought the small things together to make up the great things which made the life he lived.

If I may be permitted time, I will quote one brief sentence, the author of which was a judge and a friend of the late Winfield Scott Hammond, whom he greatly admired. I have often heard him quote it. I do not quote it with any reflection upon its sentiment so far as theology is concerned, but as it reflects his ideal of the kindnesses of everyday life. It is:

A single dog waived from the summit of St. Bernard bearing a message of hope and sympathy to the weary and benighted is a better exemplar of the teachings of mankind than is the founder of any scholastic theology which can only mystify the soul or paralyze the intellect.

And so in this body, in which he served four terms, I consider it a duty which I perform with a deep sense of sorrow, to say these few words in this Chamber to the memory of Winfield Scott Hammond, the late lamented governor of Minnesota. [Applause.]

Of the many beautiful testimonials to the memory of the late Winfield Scott Hammond, who was an honored Member of this House until the time of his resignation a year ago to assume the duties of governor of his State, I desire to introduce the following by prominent citizens of his State.

By Cyrus Northrop, president emeritus of the University of Minnesota:

[From the Minneapolis Journal, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"He was a splendid type of citizen—splendid in every way. The State has suffered a tremendous loss."

By A. O. Eberhart, former governor:

[From the Minneapolis Journal, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"The death of Gov. Hammond is a loss to the entire community. He was a man of exceptional ability and gave the State a good administration. Gov. Hammond did not play to the gallery. He did what he thought best for the State at all times."

By Fred B. Snyder, president university board of regents:

[From the Minneapolis Journal, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"The death of Gov. Hammond is a great loss to the State and to the university. The more I saw of the governor the better I liked him. He was a Democrat in politics, but he was a nonpartisan governor. I considered him one of the ablest men the State of Minnesota ever had in the executive chair."

By Charles M. Andrist, secretary to the late governor:

[From the Minneapolis Journal, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"Mr. Hammond was the best friend I had. I can not express my grief in mere words. He was one of the cleanest cut men in his public acts I have ever known. His decisions were based on whether a proposition was right or wrong and never as to whether it was expedient or inexpedient. He was one of the most lovable of men."

By Hon. JAMES R. MANN, minority leader of the House:

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"I had a great personal admiration for the governor and his death moves me deeply. He was a fair fighter at all times and wise in council and debate. Minnesota has suffered a great loss; so has the country at large. It is a pity that such a man should have been stricken in the flower of his manhood."

By Senator OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD:

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"I am greatly shocked to hear of Mr. Hammond's death. He was an ideal Representative and performed excellent service as a Member of the House. As a member of the Ways and Means Committee I knew him well and had great respect for his judgment on public questions."

By Senator MOSES E. CLAPP:

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"Coming so suddenly, Gov. Hammond's death was a great shock to all of us and has plunged us in grief. Our acquaintance dates to the time when he was practicing law in St. James, before he became a candidate for Congress, and our relations as members of the same profession were always pleasant. When he came to this House we were thrown still more together, and I came to regard him as a man of sterling worth. He was very able, deliberate in his judgment, and of high character and integrity."

By Joseph P. Tumulty, Secretary to the President:

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press, Dec. 31, 1915.]

"I knew Gov. Hammond well, and had respect for his good common sense, his poise, and the deliberative judgment that he brought to bear in the consideration of public questions. He was a fine type of American, a faithful public servant, and a loyal friend."

A few days before the late governor left for his last earthly trip to the Southland, in answer to a request for a Christmas expression by Miss Carrie E. Eppley, superintendent of Hopewell Hospital, in Minneapolis, he wrote the following reply, which is so thoroughly characteristic of the man that I offer it here:

Letter to superintendent of Hopewell Hospital:

[From the Minneapolis Tribune, Jan. 2, 1916.]

"DEAR MISS EPPLEY: Each has his burdens to bear. The more cheerfully they are carried the brighter they seem to be. How fortunate it is that we may always hope for a to-morrow brighter and happier than to-day. Troubles may disappear. Business may be better. The sick again may be strong. The distressed may have relief. Hope makes one cheerful, and cheerfulness aids us in getting over the rough places in life.

"God is good. He has given us the right to hope for better days in this world and assurance of the happiest days in the world to come. Christmas is the anniversary of Him who has given the children of earth their greatest joy and dearest hope, the Apostle of Love and Sunshine, foe of hate and gloom. Let us all rejoice that on this day, centuries ago, Christ was born. May His loving-kindness rest upon the patients of Hopewell Hospital and bring them joy on this Christmas day and assure them of a happy, bright New Year.

"Yours, very truly,

"WINFIELD S. HAMMOND."

I submit, also, a resolution by the Minnesota delegation in Congress, passed on January 4, 1916.

The Members of the Minnesota delegation in Congress having heard of the recent death of Gov. Winfield Scott Hammond, met and adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we express our sincere and profound sorrow at the sudden death of Gov. Hammond. Having known and associated with him, his death is a personal loss to all of us. In his official life he was a man of the highest character, faithful and efficient in the discharge of his duties. In his private life he was modest, kind, and considerate to others. He deserved and earned the highest regard and esteem of all who knew him. His death in the prime of his power and usefulness is a distinct loss to the State and Nation he loved so well.

Resolved further, That we tender to the relatives of the deceased our deepest sympathy in this their hour of bereavement.

KNUTE NELSON.	MOSES E. CLAPP.
A. J. VOLSTEAD.	HALVOR STEENERSON.
GEORGE R. SMITH.	SYDNEY ANDERSON.
CHARLES R. DAVIS.	F. F. ELLSWORTH.
CARL C. VAN DYKE.	C. A. LINDBERGH.
C. B. MILLER.	T. D. SCHALL.

He was a modest man, a true friend, an able lawyer, a conscientious official, and an able statesman.

His death is a deep sorrow to his adopted city, a shock to the great State of Minnesota, and took from the great political party to which he was so loyally devoted the prospect of a new leader in the Nation's wide sphere.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I desire to congratulate the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH] on the beautiful and admirable speech which he just delivered. The House of Representatives, according to my judgment, is one of the strictest critics in the world, and at the same time it is one of the most generous. I do not believe there is any place on earth where a man reaches his true level more quickly than in the House of Representatives.

There is not a man who served with Gov. Hammond who does not sincerely regret his death.

None knew him but to love him;
None named him but to praise.

He came here under very peculiar circumstances and he died in a peculiar situation. He came from a district that is strongly Republican. He was preceded by a Republican, and he was succeeded by a Republican. He died as governor of a State that has anywhere from 40,000 to 80,000 Republican majority in it. The fact that he achieved these great stations so universally coveted by men is a complete demonstration of the fact that he was worthy of them. He achieved high position here, was on the great Committee on Ways and Means, and served his country and his district faithfully and well. His history is one of the valuable assets not only of the State of Minnesota but of the American Republic.

Since I have been here, now 21 years, I have served in this House with a multitude of governors, a few ex-governors, but most of them when they were here were future governors. The State of Maine has a habit of sending her ex-governors to the House of Representatives. That is the only State that has that habit. I have always said, and I say now, that one of the most valuable things that comes to a man in public life here is the personal friendships which he forms. We may be defeated hereafter and retired to private life, and whatever glories we have attained here may fade from the public mind, and probably will, but the recollection of the personal friendships abides with us always. I am glad that the big aisle is not a line of demarcation between friends. [Applause.]

Accident determines very largely our associates here and elsewhere. Accident first brought me into close communion with Gov. Hammond, on account of a very gracious act which he performed. In the old time, when we drew for seats, I was extremely lucky. The first House that I served in I was the first Democrat to draw a seat, and in the next two Houses that I served in I drew high enough up to get within the central block of seats. The next House I served in I was again the first Democrat to draw a seat. The sixth time, coming up on the street car the morning the House was to be organized, I told my wife that on the doctrine of probabilities I ought to be the last Member in the House to draw a seat, and I was next to the last. The astronomer Proctor figured it out once—and he was a great astronomer—that when playing poker a man would hold a royal straight flush only once out of a million hands. On the same doctrine of probabilities a man ought not to have drawn the first seat on his side more than once in any service in this House shorter than that of my venerable friend, Mr. Speaker CANNON. So on the sixth occasion when Mr. Hammond was here the first time I had to take a seat away back yonder on the outside rim. He drew so high up that he selected the seat that is right where the end of the table now is on the Democratic side, and, by the way, that was the best seat in the House. He came to me—I had never seen him or been introduced to him—and he said, "You have a great deal to do here and I am a new Member and will not have very much to do, and I want to swap seats with you." That was, as I said, a gracious and kindly act, and I never forgot it.

Minnesota has been unfortunate in one thing; that is, the Democrats of Minnesota. Within a comparatively recent time they have elected two governors. They elected Gov. Johnson three times. He was not a bad chance for being President of the United States, and if he had lived that third term out I am not at all certain that he would not have been now in the White House. From the peculiar circumstances under which Gov. Hammond lived and the high position that he attained, he was not a bad chance for President sometime if he had lived the Psalmist's allotment. Of course death comes to us all, but I have philosophized time and again a good deal about when men die. It is strange to me that a man in the very flower of his years, as Gov. Hammond was, a little past 50, a strong useful man, of high capacity, of power to serve his country with ability, should be taken and so many others who are not of very much account in the world should be left behind. But such things must be. While the House of Representatives can not in the very nature of things adjourn out of respect for the memory of all the former Congressmen who die, I think it is eminently fitting and proper that these exercises should take place in behalf of one of the ablest, most amiable, and most modest men with whom I have been associated in the 21 years I have been here. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, we have all heard with profound regret of the death of the distinguished governor of Minnesota, who for eight years was a Member of this body. During the entire period of his service here I knew him intimately and well, and was closely connected with his activities as a Member of Congress.

I take this opportunity to pay this tribute of respect to the memory of my friend.

He was a modest, quiet, cultured gentleman, and at the same time a strong, forceful man of action. In all the emergencies of life he discharged his full duty to his community, his State, and his country.

Winfield Scott Hammond was born 53 years ago in the State of Massachusetts and spent in New England the years of his childhood and his young manhood. He was splendidly educated in an old-fashioned, conservative New England college. When he attained his majority he went to the great State in which he spent the mature years of his life. He brought with him the culture and conservatism of New England to aid him in his work in the great progressive northwest section of the United States. He there had presented to him the splendid possibilities of usefulness which open up always before educated young men of talent and ability in that section of the United States. He earned at once the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens and he retained it until the very last. The high esteem in which he was held by those who knew him best is evidenced by the fact that although he was a Democrat with opinions fixed and unchangeable, he was elected to Congress four times from a district strongly Republican. Just before the expiration of his service here, after he had stood for seven years in the limelight and after, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, he had rendered valuable aid and assistance in the construction of the Democratic revenue measure now in operation, he was elected governor of Minnesota, a State which can always be considered one of the Republican States of the Union. Such honors as this rarely come to a man on this earth.

He was for years a member of the great committee of this House on which I have the honor to serve—the Ways and Means Committee—to which has been delegated the task of preparing the several revenue measures which in recent years have passed the House, and of preparing the tariff bill now in force. During the long hearings and deliberations which preceded the reporting out of these tariff bills the members of the committee, whether they agreed with him or not, learned to respect and to honor him. We learned early that while he was a man of strong convictions he was always ready to yield to evidence and to argument and was conscientious in the discharge of every duty. He was, in all emergencies and at all times, an honest man, and no greater compliment can be paid to the memory of a man than this.

He died when for him the sun still stood high in the heavens, when he was still in all the vigor of manhood, and when his mental powers were at their very best. He died far from home in the pleasant Southland, and when his body commenced its long journey back to his home in the colder North, with splendid chivalry the governors of the great States through which his remains passed acted as a bodyguard, and his remains were tenderly conveyed across State boundaries and over great rivers back to the home he loved and to the people who loved him. To-day his remains rest under the snow in the State he loved.

He leaves to his family and to his friends a record of accomplishments extending throughout the years of his life.

May the snows of winter lie soft on his last resting place; may the winds of winter blow light over his grave; may the birds sing there their sweetest songs through the long, sunny summer days to come.

Kind, loyal, faithful friend, farewell!

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman is accorded five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished Speaker of this House, who is loved on both sides of the House equally well, has already referred this afternoon to the personal friendships which are formed in the House between Members, regardless of parties, The new Members of the House can not yet understand the personal relations which exist between men who in the open meet only in combat. It is, I think, the saving quality of the American people that they make their political issues on principles, and after a political fight is over and one side or the other has won and men have been elected to offices of responsibility they retain personal friendly relations. That is not the case everywhere in the world. Last spring I went with a party to Hawaii. Mrs. Mann and I spent some time in California and returned home about the 1st of July, where I met a large number of invitations on my desk to go out and make addresses in many different places, perhaps undoubtedly because some misguided people in the world had the notion that they might be hearing a future President or candidate for the presidency. [Laughter and applause.] I had resolved to decline all of these, because I had made up my mind to take a rest last summer. Among the invitations which I received was one from the State Bar Association of Minnesota. I wrote a letter declining; but later, in going over the papers, I received a communication from Gov. Hammond asking me to accept this invitation, and because I had formed such a high idea of Gov. Hammond and had become so friendly personally with him in the House that was the only invitation at that time which I accepted, because I wanted to show to him that I did have for him a warm, affectionate feeling as well as a high personal regard. And it was a great pleasure to me when I learned of his leaving us for the other world to know that I had so felt toward him and, as I believe, every other Member in the House had felt toward him who knew him. It was a great loss to the House when he left us to become governor of Minnesota. It was a great loss to the country when he was called hence. [Applause.]

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to realize that the Congress is about to legislate on the subject of rural credits. There are millions of homeless and landless people throughout this country who will hail with delight the information that the American Congress is now to consider this great problem.

In my judgment it is the greatest economic question Congress has dealt with for more than 40 years.

Mr. Speaker, on July 22, 1915, it was my privilege to say in a statement to the Texas people that this Congress should enact rural-credits legislation and that it should be bottomed upon certain principles. As outlined then, I reiterate them to-day.

The Baltimore platform, declaring that rural-credits legislation is of equal importance to the reformation of our currency laws, Democracy should immediately redeem that promise. Having studied the question for many months, I suggest legislation upon substantially these principles.

Provide for organizing national farm loan associations, with Federal charters and Government aid, of not less than five farmers, in certain districts throughout the United States for the purpose of making long-time loans on farm lands and at a rate of interest not to exceed 6 per cent per annum, for the purpose of improving farm lands already acquired and for enabling tenants and those without homes to purchase and improve farms and broad acres. These associations should be federated in 12 Federal land banks, corresponding substantially to the 12 Federal reserve banks. The details should be worked out under the "Amortization plan" so as to allow these mortgages to run for periods of time ranging from 5 to 35 or more years, and should permit paying off present farm incumbrances of more than $5,000,000,000 so as to reduce interest rate and burdens. And as members of the Federal land banks these associations should be allowed to use the farm mortgages as collateral with said land banks for the purpose of converting them into cash and as the basis for farm loan bonds or debentures.

TWELVE FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

The Government should authorize the establishment of 12 Federal land banks, with a capital stock of not less than $500,000 each, for the purpose of buying mortgages from the land associations and of raising the capital therefore by issuing farm loan bonds or debentures.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS IN THE FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

The law should allow the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit in the Federal land banks one-half of the general fund held in the Treasury of the United States in order that such banks may use this Government money to securely establish and maintain this rural credits system. The credit of the Government should be furnished in this and other ways in abundant measure to place the farmers' banking machinery upon the surest foundation. The commercial banking act is saturated with Government aid. The Government should subscribe for the stock of the Federal land banks, provided the subscriptions of farm-loan associations and other subscribers are not sufficient.

It should be provided that the Government credit and funds are placed behind these banks in abundant fashion. The Federal Government should obligate itself to purchase each year $50,000,000 or more of these farm-loan bonds. It should come squarely to the aid of these banks, and even guarantee all their bonds.

SEPARATE AND DISTINCT SYSTEM FOR FARMERS.

A farm-loan board should be created in the Treasury Department at Washington analogous to the Federal Reserve Board and endowed with substantially the same powers. This system should be entirely separate and distinct from the Federal reserve act. State institutions should be allowed to enter the system. These are the essential and fundamental points of the legislation I shall advocate.

By this method let us make it possible for farmers to lighten their burdens and for the millions of worthy and homeless men, tenants, and laborers to acquire farms and pay for them under the "Amortization plan," in periods running from five to thirty-five or more years, at a very low rate of interest and in no event to exceed 6 per cent per annum. In this way we guarantee homes for the homeless and lands for the landless. And thus we can put upon the uncultivated lands in Texas, amounting to 100,000,000 acres, sturdy farmers and home builders.

FOR THE RELIEF OF THE COTTON GROWERS AND FARMERS.

The principle of bills introduced by me for the relief of cotton growers is correct, and I defend those measures.

In addition to what the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board have ample authority for doing now to finance the cotton crop, the things proposed by me last year should have been adopted by Congress.

Under conditions brought on by the European war the Government should have deposited in the national banks of the South funds to be advanced to the producers of cotton at a low rate of interest for one year or longer. For such purpose redeemable United States notes could be issued or Panama Canal bonds could be sold and the proceeds added to such notes to bring such funds up to an adequate amount. I insist that the Secretary of the Treasury should have deposited these moneys as a trust fund to be loaned to the cotton growers, as he did when he sent to New York City banks on August 2 last year $40,000,000, with much larger sums on subsequent days, aggregating $140,000,000, to steady the stock market on Wall Street. The cotton can always be pledged at its market value and thus become the best-known security for the loans. The Government in this war crisis should do this with free and lavish hand. In July, 1915, my position was as outlined above.

1915 COTTON CROP SAVED—SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY USES THE POWER AS SUGGESTED.

Mr. Speaker, in line with these contentions the Secretary of the Treasury in 1915 deposited in the Federal reserve banks of the South Government funds and provided for financing the cotton crop and enabling farmers to hold it. The Federal Reserve Board established its commodity rate and made it possible for the member banks to rediscount paper based on cotton warehouse receipts and to loan money to the cotton farmers at a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent. The value of the cotton crop was preserved, and the fate befalling the farmers in 1914 by the paralysis of the cotton market was averted. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board deserve the gratitude of the southern people and are receiving it. It was my good fortune last August to urge this exact course upon those officials in accordance with my promises, and I am grateful in finding myself in precise accord with the course pursued by our Government.

SECRETARY M'ADOO TAKES PRIDE IN DEPOSITING CROP FUNDS—1915 ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

In his annual report just out, speaking of the cotton crop, Mr. McAdoo said:

I am led to believe that the Government's action had a happy effect upon the situation; that it contributed to the immediate restoration of confidence, prevented demoralization, and was a potential factor in the steady rise in the value of cotton from between 8 and 9 cents a pound at which it was then selling, to between 11 and 12 cents a pound, at which it is now selling.

In 1914 for many months I contended that such course would save millions of dollars to Southern farmers. The Secretary of the Treasury by his wise action preserved the value of the crop of 1915, and I congratulate and thank him for 30,000,000 of Southern people.

In August, 1915, by special visit to Washington as a Representative from Texas I had the honor to urge this exact course upon the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board.

MY RURAL CREDITS BILL INTRODUCED AT THE BEGINNING OF THIS CONGRESS.

Mr. Speaker, in further pursuance with my statement and promises I have just introduced a rural credits bill providing for long-time loans on farm lands, with the maximum interest rate of 6 per cent, to be paid off under the "Amortization plan." An analysis of the bill shows that it provides the way of bringing the "landless man" to the proud proprietorship of the soil. It points the way to the ownership of homes for the millions of tenants and landless in Texas and the other States. It provides for purchasing and improving homesteads and improving those already purchased. Its distinct features are as follows:

Provision is made for a farm-loan board, including a farm-loan commissioner to direct this rural credits system. An abundance of power is conferred on this board in conformity with the principles set forth in the Federal reserve act and as provided for in the proposed ship-purchase board. There is specific provision for organizing national farm-loan associations, with Federal charters, endowed with abundant powers for making loans on farm lands at a low rate of interest, based upon farm mortgages, as the initial units of the system. All this is in conformity with my views above set forth touching these loan associations.

In certain sections provision is made for creating 12 Federal land banks, decreeing that the Federal Government shall take stock in these banks under certain circumstances. These farm-loan associations are federated into 12 land banks, which correspond substantially with the 12 Federal reserve banks. Provision is made allowing mortgages to run for periods ranging from 5 to 35 years and to be paid off under the "Amortization plan." This will enable paying off present farm incumbrances of more than $5,000,000,000. The Federal land banks are authorized to purchase mortgages from the farm-loan associations and to issue debenture bonds upon said mortgages.

Further on there is provision for depositing one-half of the public funds held in the Treasury of the United States in the 12 Federal land banks. Authority for such deposits is given in section 14 of this bill as introduced. In section 31 there is abundant provision for Government aid. The Federal Government is authorized to purchase as much as $100,000,000 in any one year of the farm-loan bonds issued upon farm mortgages. Here in bounteous measure Government aid is extended to the farmers as it has been accorded to the commercial world in the Federal reserve act; and upon the same terms, in the same way, and on identically the same principle the farmers with equal cost may secure funds from the Government mint through this rural-credits system.

Mr. Speaker, I shall insist that the Government purchase as many as $100,000,000 of these bonds in any year and that the credit of the Government shall be placed behind this system by guaranteeing all the farm-loan bonds issued by any and all the Federal land banks. In this way we set up a system with life and vigor in it that will sustain itself and put the farmers upon an exact footing with the commercial and business world already provided for in the Federal reserve act. For a system based on these great principles I shall continue to contend in this Congress. Let no man think that a rural-credits law not entirely divorced from the commercial banking system and filled to the fullest measure with Government aid will satisfy the farming population of America. Their demand is just and should be obeyed. For one, I raise their standard and shall fight to the end of the conflict with the earnest belief that their day of victory is at hand under Democratic administration.

Mr. Speaker, when the commercial world demanded an asset currency and said they desired the credit of this Government behind the great banking interests of America, we served notice on them that the day would soon come when the tillers of the soil, who make this country great, prosperous, and happy, would knock at the doors of Congress and demand a system of rural credits in behalf of agriculture. That day has come. The commercialist can take his assets—his mere paper merchandise—to the Federal reserve banks and have Federal reserve notes exchanged for them in any amount consistent with the 40 per cent gold reserve requirement. And now we say mortgages on the rich acres of soil in this country are a better security. It is high time for the farmer to come to the Government and secure money on the same terms on which we are issuing it to the commercial world. Therefore, I shall stand in this House until the contest is ended and in my humble way insist that the United States Government shall guarantee farm-loan bonds based on farm mortgages, and purchase $100,000,000 or more of them every year. I know there are good men who stand here and fear to raise their voices in behalf of the farming population because they dread the stigma of being called "demagogues." Many good men are swayed in their attitude in that respect because they dread criticism. So far as I am concerned, my course is fixed, and whether the stigma of demagogy is placed on my name or not, I enlist on the side of the man who tills the soil, and shall press forward in this contest until it is settled in their behalf. [Applause.]

WEDNESDAY, January 5, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee that Thou mayest fulfill a great purpose in us. We can not always discern the path of the Divine plan, but by the manifestation of Thy truth Thou hast given us to know that life in its fullest expression is to have a larger sphere and to fulfill a Divine commission. Thy Word is in our hearts and is the light shining across the vast tracts of the years leading us unto the perfect day. We pray that Thou wilt guide us this day by Thy truth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina presented memorials of sundry citizens of South Carolina, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I present a resolution of railway employees residing at Van Buren, Ark., asking that the report of the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations be printed and distributed. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Printing.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas by an act of our National Congress approved August 23, 1912, the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations was created, and directed, along with other duties, to inquire—

"Into the general conditions of labor engaged in the principal industries of the United States;

"Into existing relations between employers and employees;

"Into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith;

"Into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining;

"Into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employers and employees; and

"Shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and submit to Congress its findings and conclusions, together with such recommendations as they may deem proper for the amicable adjustment of conditions;" and

Whereas the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations has submitted its report to Congress with the recommendation that it be printed and given general distribution; and

Whereas we believe it is of the utmost importance as a compilation of facts concerning the existing conditions which oppose the raising the standard of civilization for the laboring classes; and

Whereas we believe the "Manly report" of said commission is an unprejudiced, fearless declaration of the truth as regards the evils of our industrial system, a frank and courageous presentation of the information sought through the creation of the commission, the reliability of which in every detail is absolutely beyond question; and

Whereas we feel there is a determined effort on the part of the employing classes to prevent the publishing of the "Manly report" and all the evidence taken by said commission: Therefore be it

Resolved, By this joint union meeting, held in Van Buren, Ark., Saturday, December 18, 1915, and composed of representatives of Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, International Association of Machinists, International Association of Machinist Helpers, International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, Brotherhood of Railway Car Men of America, Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers International Alliance, representing nearly 500 railway employees, residents of said city, that we, as individuals and citizens of the United States, each being a constituent of the Senators and Congressman from the fifth district of the State of Arkansas, demand that our Senators and Congressmen use their utmost endeavors to have said report and evidence published in full and one-half million copies printed, less than which we deem not enough to permit of general distribution throughout the United States, that we may be able to judge for ourselves as to what steps to take to remedy any condition that may appear to demand attention; and be it further

Resolved, That we send a copy of this resolution to Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON and Hon. J. P. CLARKE, United States Senators from Arkansas, and Hon. OTIS WINGO, Congressman from this the fifth congressional district, State of Arkansas.

Resolution 663.

A resolution memorializing Congress to grant to the city of Billings, Mont., 1,600 acres of land located near said city for park purposes.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Whereas, because of the rapid growth of the city of Billings, Mont., an urgent necessity exists for the establishment of recreation parks for the use of the residents thereof; and

Whereas the land embraced in sections 16 and 22 and the south half of section 10, all in township 1 north, range 25 east, Montana principal meridian, in Yellowstone County, Mont., containing 1,600 acres, lies within 5 miles of the city of Billings, and is rough and broken in character and of slight value for agricultural purposes, but is nevertheless a place of unusual natural beauty and charm which could be developed into a great pleasure ground for the inhabitants of our city, as well as a place for the preservation and growth of specimens of our native fauna and flora; and

Whereas said land is now unused and unoccupied, but is capable of great development as a public park and recreation ground: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the city council of the city of Billings, Mont., do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of such legislation as may be necessary to permit of the patenting by the United States to the city of Billings of all of the land above described.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the city clerk to the honorable Secretary of the Interior and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with the earnest request that they use every effort within their power to secure the legislation needed for the accomplishment of the purpose hereinabove set forth.

Passed by the city council of the city of Billings, Mont., and approved by the mayor of said city this 29th day of November, 1915.

Approved:

E. P. GERHART, Mayor.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Whereas in our city there are no public parks and suitable outing places for the inhabitants of Billings; and

Whereas the land embraced in sections 16 and 22 and south half of section 10, all in township 1 north, range 25 east, Montana principal meridian, in Yellowstone County, Mont., containing 1,600 acres, lies within 5 miles of the city of Billings and is in every way suited for park purposes and of not much value for agricultural purposes but is of great scenic beauty and a place excellently suited for the propagation and preservation of many species of flowers and animals; and in view of the further fact that this land is now unoccupied and unused and is capable of being developed into an excellent public park for our city: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Ministerial Association of the city of Billings, Mont., do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of such legislation as may be necessary to permit the patenting by the United States to the city of Billings all of the lands above described.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by our committee to the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Billings, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant to the city of Billings 1,600 acres of land located near said city for park purposes. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD with the name of the first signer thereof and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is situated north of Billings a tract of State school land, approximately 2,000 acres in extent, in township 1 north, range 25 east, unsuitable for agricultural purposes but decidedly suitable for the location of a great natural park for the city of Billings; and

Whereas this land is now owned by the State of Montana and is not considered to be sufficiently valuable for sale at the State minimum price of $10 per acre, because of its rough and rocky character: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the Billings Chamber of Commerce, That we hereby indorse a plan, asking that the Congress of the United States grant to the State of Montana the right to select other lands in the place of the lands above described, in order that the State of Montana may be permitted to dispose of the lands in question to the city of Billings at a much reduced price, thereby creating the opportunity for a public improvement which will be of great value to this city and community: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the governor of the State of Montana, the State land board, and the Congress of the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

KALISPELL, MONT., December 23, 1915.

Senator HENRY L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I want to congratulate you for the stand you have taken in behalf of the homesteader who has the courage to take up a forest homestead, in the introduction of bill No. 2383, an act to amend the present law, which permits a person to prove up with $150 expended on clearing in lieu of the 20 acres now required to be put in cultivation.

To any persons who are acquainted with conditions regarding the taking of homesteads in the national forest it will appear that there is a vast difference between a forest homestead and one taken in a prairie country as regards the amount of money and labor necessary to put the land in cultivation.

Under the present law a person taking a prairie homestead can put the required 20 acres in cultivation at a cost of not to exceed $5 per acre, while a person taking a homestead in the forest can not put his required 20 acres in cultivation for less than $50 to $75 per acre, which is a manifest hardship to a claimant on a forest claim.

The people of Montana are with you on this bill, and I trust you will be successful in securing its passage.

Yours, truly,
B. C. BALES.

Mr. MYERS. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Kalispell, Mont., remonstrating against an increase in the tax on bills of lading. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

KALISPELL, MONT., December 22, 1915.

Whereas the Government now compels the shipper of any products to place a 1 cent Government stamp upon each bill of lading; and

Whereas it has been authoritatively reported that an effort will be made to increase this revenue from 1 cent to 3 cents upon bills of lading: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we consider such proposed increase unjust and discriminatory against the shipper and savoring of class legislation; and

Whereas a persistent fight for the last few years has been waged against the local jobber, prejudicing his business in the eyes of the consumer and retailer, reducing his business; and

Whereas this proposed increase will fall directly upon the shipper.

Therefore we deem it unjust and discriminatory and respectfully request that you lend your aid in defeating such proposed legislation.

W. H. GRIFFIN,
President.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition of sundry citizens of Lincoln County, Mont., praying for the reduction in the areas of cultivation required under homestead laws in certain cases. I ask

LIBBY, MONT., May 12, 1915.

To Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.

We, the undersigned entrymen on eliminated lands in the Kootenai National Forest, do respectfully petition the Congress of the United States for relief from certain conditions as set forth below.

Lands listed for homestead entry in national forests are those which contain a limited amount of merchantable timber and are suitable for agriculture. Many of these units are covered with a thick growth of pole pine and brush which is of no value and must be cleared before the land can be cultivated. Such merchantable timber as any of these units may contain is very scattering and very seldom of any sale value, owing to distance from marketing points, and only adds to the expense of clearing. Much of this land is burnt over, leaving stumps and snags which are still more difficult to remove. Where these units contain natural meadows, these must often be drained before they are suitable for cultivation. In fact, there is very rarely an acre of land in this section which can be cultivated without much preliminary work.

The present homestead law requires the tillage of one-eighth of the land entered, 20 acres of the 160-acre homestead, and this must be done within two years from the date of entry. While there is a provision for a reduction of this tillage at the discretion of the Land Office, yet the Commissioner of the General Land Office has ruled that no reduction will be allowed on account of expense of clearing.

We invite a comparison of the labor required to cultivate 20 acres of prairie land with the same under conditions as described above. In the first instance 15 days' plowing and 15 days' harrowing and seeding would easily complete the work. In the case of the forest homesteader, a whole season, six or seven months of hard labor for one man, is required to cut and pile the brush for burning. Then the stumps must be removed by expensive blasting or pulling, the holes filled, and the land otherwise prepared for plowing, which requires fully another season. This estimate is conservative and could be accomplished only under conditions more favorable than the average. Then the work of plowing and seeding is still to be done. This leaves the homesteader no time for building, fencing, and such other work as is necessary to make a home. As many of these claims are in isolated regions reached only by pack trail the entryman is obliged to donate a large amount of work for road building. Where meadows are to be drained the labor is almost as great.

In the first instance, the crop harvested from the 20 acres would naturally pay the cost of cultivation and provide in a measure for the living of the family; while in our case we get no return either from the first or second year's work, and the homesteader is forced to leave his place for a part of each year in order to work to support his family.

We respectfully suggest the enactment of an amendment which would grant to the entryman the right to make final proof on the showing of an amount of work, such as clearing, draining, etc., equal to that which would be necessary to cultivate the acreage of open land required under the present law. A mere reduction of acreage would not be sufficient as in many instances the entryman has already lost his right to make final proof owing to the impossibility to do the specified cultivation within the time limit. Such a law as we suggest would put the forest homesteader on an equal footing with the man who makes entry on prairie land.

All names signed to this petition are of those whose claims come under most or all of the conditions described above.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To His Excellency the President of the United States, the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, the honorable Secretary of Labor of the United States, and the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington:

We, your memorialists, the Senate of the State of Washington and the House of Representatives, representing the people of the State of Washington in the fourteenth session of the legislature of said State, in regular session assembled, most respectfully represent, petition, and pray as follows, that—

Whereas the commerce, commercial standing of the seaports, and business of our transcontinental railroads are severely handicapped and deprived of their rightful business and revenue by reason of the present organization and operation of the United States Immigration Service; and

Whereas the maintenance of the present large staff of inspectors and clerks of the United States Immigration Service in Victoria, Vancouver, and other cities in the Dominion of Canada works a grave injustice to American railroads in the State of Washington by affording undue advantages to transportation lines of Canada; and

Whereas no reciprocal or corresponding force of officers is maintained at the seaports or land ports of the State of Washington by any foreign government to give American railroads the same opportunity in competition for the long haul on business originating in this State and destined to points in the Dominion of Canada or the eastern United States as is afforded by the United States Immigration Service to Canada railroads; and

Whereas the seaports and ports of entry of the State of Washington under existing arrangements are being deprived of credit for passengers actually entering Puget Sound ports from foreign contiguous and noncontiguous lands; and

Whereas passengers so entering at ports of the State of Washington from the Dominion of Canada and seeking naturalization as citizens of the United States are now compelled to obtain a certificate of entry from an officer of the United States located in Montreal, Canada, a distant city in a foreign land, notwithstanding statutory provision requiring issuance of such certificate by United States officials at the United States port at which entry is actually made; and

Whereas the number of United States immigration officials in the State of Washington has been reduced until it does not furnish the protection which the State's strategic position requires, situated as it is on both land and water boundaries of British possessions; and

Whereas the number of foreign insane in our State hospitals, criminals, and paupers have become a heavy burden on the taxpayers of the State;

Therefore, for good cause shown, we, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Washington, in the fourteenth legislative session assembled, most earnestly petition the President of the United States of America, the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, the Secretary of Labor, and the Senators and Representatives from the State of Washington to make suitable provision to afford relief from the conditions above described.

Certified a true copy.

FRANK M. DALLAM, Jr.,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Washington, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WASHINGTON,

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Washington. Done at the capitol, at Olympia, this 2d day of March, A. D. 1915.

Senate joint memorial No. 2.

To His Excellency Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America; the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States; the honorable Secretary of War; and the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington:

We, your memorialists, the Senate of the State of Washington and the House of Representatives representing the people of the State of Washington in the fourteenth legislature of said State, in regular session assembled, most respectfully represent, petition, and pray as follows:

That—

Whereas the States of Washington and Oregon have many wealthy seacoast cities, towns, railroad and steamship terminals on the Pacific coast wholly dependent upon the national seacoast fortifications for protection from invasion from the high seas; and

Whereas, by the fifth biennial report of the State board of tax commissioners of the State of Washington, it appears that the assessed valuation of all the taxable property in the State of Washington, assessed at 50 per cent of its appraised value, is in the sum of $1,025,460,942; that, by the second biennial report of the tax commissioners of the State of Oregon, the assessed valuation of all the taxable property in the State of Oregon is approximately as great as that of the State of Washington; and

Whereas there are three transcontinental railway systems operating trains in and out of Grays Harbor; that a very large passenger and freight traffic is handled by said systems daily to and from Grays Harbor to the north, south, and east; and

Whereas a substantial system of public roads for automobile and other travel has been constructed by Chehalis County within its borders; that substantial automobile roads have been constructed from the beaches on both the north and south side of Grays Harbor, connecting with the State highways running east to Puget Sound and the Columbia River; and

Whereas the fortifications on Puget Sound and the Columbia River are so remote from any possible base that an invading enemy could select for its operations that they are wholly inadequate to protect the lives and property of the people of the States of Washington and Oregon from invasion from the Pacific Ocean through Grays and Willapa Harbors; and

Whereas the great strategic importance and possibilities of Grays and Willapa Harbors as a base for military operations in the northwest are open, obvious, and apparent to the most casual observers; and

Whereas the strategic importance and possibilities of Grays and Willapa Harbors as a base for military operations in the northwest and in southwestern Washington and northwestern Oregon have been recognized by such eminent authorities as Gens. Marion P. Maus and Homer Lea, of the United States Army; and

Whereas 58 per cent of the entire population of the State of Oregon and 61 per cent of the entire population of the State of Washington and seven-tenths of the wealth of both States is within six hours of the principal strategic sphere of the northwest; that this strategic center, midway between the centers of population in the States of Washington and Oregon, commands all lines of railways that traverse said States north and south; that Grays and Willapa Harbors are but two hours to the west, the fortifications on the Columbia River are seven and one-half hours to the south, and the fortifications on Puget Sound are five and one-half hours to the north of said strategic sphere; and

Whereas Grays and Willapa Harbors are wholly without fortifications or military defenses of any kind, character, or description whatever; that said harbors are open to invasion in case of a foreign war; and

Whereas the whole of the States of Washington and Oregon are open and accessible to invasion from the Pacific Ocean through Grays and Willapa Harbors; that the fortification of said harbors is necessary to protect the lives and property of the people of said States in case of a hostile invasion from the Pacific Ocean; and

Whereas experience and recent observation has demonstrated that a coast, city, town, harbor, or roadstead can not be safely defended from invasion from the high seas by naval squadrons or fleets; and

Whereas it appears by a letter from Acting Secretary of War Robert Shaw Oliver to Senator W. L. JONES, bearing date of December 2, 1912, that Gen. Marion P. Maus, as commanding general of the Department of the Columbia, recommended the fortification of said harbors in his report to the War Department, subsequent to the Army maneuvers during the summer of 1912, in Chehalis Valley and on Grays Harbor; that said maneuvers demonstrated the necessity for the fortification of the said harbors; and

Whereas it appears that petitions for the fortification of Grays and Willapa Harbors were filed with Senator W. L. JONES during the Sixty-second Congress of the United States, which said petitions were signed by taxpayers of the States of Washington and Oregon; that the petitioners thereof represented $332,898,097 of taxable property, as assessed by the taxing officers of the several counties of said States and equalized by the State board of tax commissioners of both States; that said petitions were duly certified by the legally constituted taxing officers of said States; and that as so certified said petitions showed the amount of taxable property represented by each of said petitioners thereon, and as set opposite the name of each of said petitioners; and

Whereas the assets represented by the following petitioners were not included in the above amount, so certified as aforesaid: Ladd & Tilton Bank, Portland, Oreg.; First National Bank, Portland, Oreg.; National Bank of Commerce, Tacoma, Wash.; Fidelity Trust Co., Tacoma, Wash.; Pacific National Bank, Tacoma, Wash.; Dexter Horton National Bank, Seattle, Wash.; National Bank of Commerce, Seattle, Wash.; Seattle National Bank, Seattle, Wash.; Scandinavian-American Bank, Seattle, Wash.; Coffman, Dobson & Co., bankers, Chehalis, Wash.; Chehalis National Bank, Chehalis, Wash.; Security State Bank, Chehalis, Wash.; that many wholesale merchants and manufacturing corporations in the Northwest signed said petitions whose assets could not be shown by certificates of the taxing officers of said States; and

Whereas the following commercial bodies of the Northwest have, by resolutions duly and regularly adopted, found that the fortification of said harbors was a public necessity for the adequate protection of the lives and property of the people of said States, to wit: Portland Chamber of Commerce, Portland, Oreg.; New Seattle Chamber of Commerce, Seattle, Wash.; Aberdeen Chamber of Commerce, Aberdeen, Wash.; Montesano Chamber of Commerce, Montesano, Wash.; Spokane Chamber of Commerce, Spokane, Wash.; Olympia Chamber of Commerce, Olympia, Wash.; Centralia Chamber of Commerce, Centralia, Wash.; and the Hoquiam Commercial Club, of Hoquiam, Wash.:

Therefore, for good cause shown, we, your memorialists, the Senate of the State of Washington (the House concurring), representing the people of the State of Washington in the Fourteenth Legislature of the State of Washington, in regular session assembled, most earnestly petition the President of the United States of America, the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, the Secretary of War, and the Senators and Representatives from the State of Washington to make suitable provision for adequate fortifications to protect the entrances of said harbors against any invasion from the Pacific Ocean that may be attempted in time of hostilities by any foreign power; and

The secretary of the State of Washington be, and is hereby, directed to immediately transmit a certified copy of this memorial to His Excellency the President of the United States, the honorable Secretary of War, to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Washington in Congress, and to both houses of the Legislature of the State of Oregon.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed the senate February 1, 1915.

LOUIS F. HART,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house February 17, 1915.

W. W. CONNER,
Speaker of the House.

Filed in the office of the secretary of state February 23, 1915.

I. M. HOWELL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. KENYON. I present a concurrent resolution of the Thirty-sixth General Assembly of Iowa, requesting the Congress of the United States to enact a parcel-post law limiting the weight of packages to a maximum of 40 pounds. I ask that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the glory and prosperity of Iowa has rested not alone in her wonderful farms, but also in her prosperous and beautiful cities and towns as well, and the prosperity of her entire citizenship requires a symmetrical development of both farm and city, for the injury of either is sure to bring a loss and depreciation to the other and a decline in the population of the State; and

Whereas the rates of the parcel post are so low for excessive distances and the charge for shipment is in such unjust and unfair proportion to the haul that neither the Government nor the railroads are receiving sufficient compensation to cover cost of service rendered, and a large amount of trade that legitimately belongs to the inhabitants of the State of Iowa is being diverted to the great cities of the land in distant States. This policy is depriving thousands of our best and brightest young men and women of their birthright by forcing them to emigrate from the State in order that they may have a chance in the world; and

Whereas these great concerns in distant cities do not contribute in any way to the revenues of the State of Iowa, nor do they in any way assist in the education of the youth of our State; they build no roads or bridges and bear none of our many burdens incident to the development of Iowa; and

Whereas they are waxing fat upon the trade they take from our State and are fast developing into great monopolies that bid fair to equal if not excel in size the greatest manufacturing concerns in the land; and

Whereas it is the policy of Iowa to provide work and opportunity for all its children, and we believe the Federal Government, of which we are a part, should not tax the people to reimburse losses in the Parcel Post Service when these losses are incurred in establishing great monopolies that are fast sapping the life of our cities and towns, and depriving our children of a place and opportunity in their own community; and

Whereas thousands of Iowa's citizens have petitioned the General Assembly of the State of Iowa to memorialize the Postmaster General and the Congress of the United States to limit the weight of the parcel-post package to a maximum of 40 pounds and make such readjustment in the postal rates as will eventually make each class self-supporting: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa (the House concurring), That the Postmaster General and the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested and petitioned to reduce the weight of the parcel-post package to a maximum of 40 pounds and make such readjustment in our postal rates and zones as will eventually make each class self-supporting, to the end that justice may be done as between all of the citizens of the United States, and that the unjust discrimination that now exists against the State of Iowa may be removed.

The resolution was adopted.

STATE OF IOWA,
SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, W. S. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Iowa, and as such officer the custodian of the acts and resolutions of the general assembly of said State, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a preamble and resolution passed by the thirty-sixth general assembly of said State at its session commencing January 11, A. D. 1915, as the same appears of record at page 1554 of the official senate journal of said general assembly now on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the official seal of the secretary of state of the State of Iowa. Done at Des Moines this 14th day of December, A. D. 1915.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 22) to promote and encourage the construction of wagon roads over the public lands of the United States, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 20) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 21) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1409. A bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Tulsa, Okla. (Rept. No. 23); and

S. 2409. A bill to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio (Rept. No. 22).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2266) to authorize the appointment of Duncan Grant Richart to the grade of lieutenant in the Army, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 24) thereon.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK, BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1773) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Kermit, W. Va., and I submit a report (No. 19) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RURAL CREDITS (H. DOC. NO. 494).

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I desire to present a report from the Joint Committee on Rural Credits, which was created by act of Congress last spring.

The joint committee divided into two subcommittees, a Committee on Personal Rural Credits and a Committee on Land Mortgage. The Subcommittee on Land Mortgage has made its report to the full committee and has recommended a bill. The full committee has adopted the report of the subcommittee, and I submit the report and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The report has been already printed in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, on pages 453 to 455. It has also been printed as a House document, and I therefore do not ask to have it printed as a Senate document. There will doubtless be a large demand for it, and later I may ask to have a reprint ordered.

Since the subject is up, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to introduce the bill on land mortgage at the present time and have it referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HOLLIS. The joint committee hopes that it will be able a little later in the session to recommend a bill on personal credits, but the time has been so absorbed in preparing the bill submitted to-day on land mortgage that it would like further time. It does not ask for a further appropriation.

I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which I introduce to extend the time for filing the final report from this committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that it is necessary to enact a joint resolution. Is there any reason why it should be done?

Mr. HOLLIS. The committee considered that question, and some members of the committee thought it might be necessary and others thought it might not, and in order that there might be no question the committee authorized and requested me to introduce the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no necessity for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 62) extending the time for filing the final report of the Joint Committee of Congress to Investigate Rural Credits was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time of the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress appointed pursuant to the act of Congress approved March 4, 1915, be, and is hereby, extended for four months from the passage hereof in which to file a final report as required by the said act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 3034) to prohibit belligerent vessels from transporting American citizens as passengers to or from ports in the United States, and to prohibit American and neutral vessels from transporting American citizens as passengers and contraband of war at one and the same time, was read twice by its title.

Mr. GORE. On the suggestion of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] I request unanimous consent that the bills which I have introduced may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. What are the bills, Mr. President?

Mr. GORE. They are both very short bills, I will say to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LODGE. What reference of the bills is proposed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that the bills be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and that they be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bills referred to are as follows:

A bill (S. 3033) to prohibit the issuance of passports for use on the vessels of a belligerent country.

Be it enacted, etc., That any American citizen or other person entitled to receive a passport under the laws of the United States, at the time of making and verifying an application for passport shall also make oath, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, to the effect that he will not during the time for which such passport is issued or renewed travel or accept transportation as a passenger on the vessel of any foreign country or power which shall be at the time in a state of war.

SEC. 2. That when a state of war exists between any two or more foreign powers or countries, no passport shall be authorized or issued by the Secretary of State, or by any person acting for or under him, to any citizen of the United States, or to any person owing allegiance to the United States, until such citizen shall have made oath, as prescribed in the preceding section, that he will not during the time for which such passport is issued or renewed travel or accept transportation as a passenger on any vessel of any foreign power or country which is at the time in a state of war.

SEC. 3. That any such citizen or person falsely making the oath provided for in the first section hereof, or who having taken such oath shall travel or accept transportation as a passenger on any vessel of any such belligerent power or country during the time for which such passport was issued or renewed, except in case of shipwreck or other distress at sea, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years, or both.

SEC. 4. That no person owing allegiance to the United States who shall travel or accept transportation as a passenger with or without a passport on the vessel of any country or power which is at the time in a state of war shall be entitled to the protection of this Government.

SEC. 5. That any employee or officer of the United States whose term of office is not fixed by the Constitution thereof who shall be convicted of violating the provisions of this act shall, in addition to the penalties above described, be removed from office or from the public service.

SEC. 6. That the President shall have the power by proclamation, whenever in his judgment the public peace, interest, or safety will not be jeopardized thereby, to suspend the operation of this act as to the vessels of British Honduras plying exclusively between that country and the United States, and the vessels of the Dominion of Canada plying exclusively between ports and places in the Dominion of Canada and ports and places in the United States, and he shall have power to revoke such proclamation whenever the public peace, interest, or safety require it.

SEC. 7. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect 15 days after the date of its approval by the President.

A bill (S. 3034) to prohibit belligerent vessels from transporting American citizens as passengers to or from ports in the United States, and to prohibit American and neutral vessels from transporting American citizens as passengers and contraband of war at one and the same time.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall not be lawful for the master of any vessel of any foreign country which is in a state of war to bring or transport from any port or place in a foreign country to any port or place in the United States any passenger who is a citizen of the United States, or to receive, accept, or transport from any place or port in the United States to any port or place in any foreign country any passenger who is a citizen of the United States, except when such passenger or person has been rescued from shipwreck or distress at sea. No vessel the master of which has violated the provisions of this section shall be entitled to enter or to clear in any port or place in the United States during the continuance of such war, and the master of any vessel violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years, or both.

SEC. 2. It shall not be lawful for the master of any vessel of the United States or for the master of the vessel of any neutral country, while carrying or transporting as a part of such vessel's cargo, any article defined as contraband of war by this act consigned or destined to any country which is in a state of war, to take, receive, or transport any passenger who is a citizen of the United States from any port or place in the United States to any place or port in any foreign country, or vice versa, and the master of any vessel violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years, or both.

SEC. 3. Any citizen of the United States who comes into any port or place of the United States as a passenger on the vessel of any foreign country which is in a state of war, except in case of shipwreck or distress at sea, or who shall embark in any port or place of the United States on any such vessel bound for a port or place in any foreign country, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years, or both.

SEC. 4. It shall not be lawful for any citizen of the United States to embark in any vessel of the United States or in any vessel of a neutral country in any port or place of the United States bound for any port or place in any foreign country with knowledge that any part of such vessel's cargo consists of contraband of war consigned or destined, directly or indirectly, to any port or place in any country which is in a state of war. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $2,500, or by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than two years, or both.

SEC. 5. The amount of the several fines and penalties imposed by any section of this act upon the master of any vessel carrying or bringing any of said passengers, citizens of the United States, for any violation of the provisions of this act shall be liens upon such vessel, and said vessel may be libeled therefor in any district court of the United States where such vessel shall arrive or depart.

SEC. 6. For the purposes of this act contraband of war shall comprise and consist of the following articles, to wit: Arms of all kinds, including arms for sporting purposes, and their distinctive component parts; projectiles, charges, and cartridges of all kinds, and their distinctive component parts; powder and explosives specially prepared for use in war, gun mountings, limber boxes, limbers, military wagons, field forges, and their distinctive component parts; clothing and equipment of a distinctively military character; saddle, draft, and pack animals suitable for use in war; articles of camp equipment and their distinctive component parts; armor plates; warships, including boats and their distinctive component parts of such a nature that they can only be used on a vessel of war; implements and apparatus designed exclusively for the manufacture of munitions of war, for the manufacture or repair of arms, or war material for use on land or sea.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of Commerce shall have power to prescribe and enforce suitable rules and regulations as to the entry, clearance, and manifests of said vessels, or other matters necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the two bills just introduced seek to accomplish the following objects: First, to prevent the issuance of passports for use on belligerent ships; second, to withdraw protection from American citizens who persist in traveling on the vessels of belligerents; third, to prevent belligerent ships from entering or clearing in ports of the United States if they transport American citizens as passengers to or from such ports; fourth, to prevent American vessels and neutral vessels from transporting American citizens as passengers and contraband of war at one and the same time upon one and the same voyage.

Under existing laws, both national and international, every American citizen has the legal right to travel upon any passenger vessel that sails the sea. He has the legal right, not the moral right, to run the risk of involving this Nation in war and entailing the sacrifice of millions of lives and billions of treasure. So long as this legal right exists it must be defended by our Government at whatever cost. We can not suffer the rights of our citizens to be invaded or violated with impunity. Only the Government of the United States can withdraw or suspend this right without the forfeiture of our prestige and self-respect. I believe the Government should suspend this right. No single citizen should be allowed to run the risk of drenching this Nation in blood merely in order that he may travel upon a belligerent rather than upon a neutral vessel. We have a statute now which provides that under certain circumstances an American citizen expatriates himself and under other circumstances he forfeits the right to the protection of the Government. These precedents justify the proposed legislation. During the Russo-Japanese war Great Britain ordered her subjects not to travel on belligerent ships.

We ordered American citizens to leave Mexico, to leave their homes, their business, and their property. If any American citizen, without regard to his own safety and the safety of his country, persists in traveling upon belligerent instead of neutral vessels, the Government should order him to stop or else oblige him to go at his peril. This action voluntarily taken by our Government would not be incompatible with national honor. To this extent at least pride and patriotism should take counsel of prudence.

The other bill suspends the right of belligerent vessels to enter or clear if they persist in transporting as passengers citizens of the United States and denies clearance alike to American and neutral vessels if they seek to transport American citizens as passengers and contraband of war as defined by the declaration of London at one and the same time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

VOLUNTEER MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I introduce a bill to establish volunteer military training camps for high-school students. The bill being upon a subject much under discussion at the present time, I ask unanimous consent that it may be read at length.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill.

The bill (S. 3062) to establish volunteer military training camps for high-school students was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

A bill (S. 3062) to establish volunteer military training camps for high-school students.

Whereas the President of the United States in his last annual message to the Congress has urged the creation of a larger standing Army and a system of military training which will enable the country to bring into active service, in case of emergency, a large army of trained citizens; and

Whereas it has been the policy of this Government, backed by the sentiment of the American people, to maintain a great civil government, whose glory should be in her peaceful achievements rather than in her military prowess—a standard and example to the whole world; and

Whereas militarism, as known and recognized in the Old World, is repugnant to American ideals and independence; and

Whereas any means adopted for the training of our citizens to meet the emergencies of war should never violate the historical policy and sentiment of the country by the creation of a strong military organ, whose chief function should be war, but should seek only to secure capability for service without engendering a desire for military achievements; and

Whereas this training should be of the kind to raise the standard of citizenship in peaceful occupations and should be obtained at a minimum of expenditure, and with as little interference as possible with business pursuits; and

Whereas there were enrolled in the high schools of the United States in the school year of 1913–14 541,486 boys who were generally without occupation of any kind during the summer months; and

Whereas these young men, as a rule, would welcome the out-of-door activities and military training and by such physical training and discipline would be better fitted for their school work as well as their life occupations; and

Whereas, by pursuing this plan of utilizing the otherwise waste time of these pupils during the summer months in military training, we should have in a few years an army of well-trained men of sufficient number to meet the demands of war; and

Whereas it has been demonstrated that in time of war trained medical officers with experience in looking after the health of large bodies of men are a most necessary adjunct to armies: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare such abandoned or unoccupied military posts of the country as may, in his judgment, be best fitted for use as military training camps during the months of July and August of each year, where the male high-school students of the United States may be given military training and instruction in the same general manner as is now provided for the training of the cadets at the Military Academy at West Point during the summer months; that any male student of any high school in the United States shall be allowed to enter such camp by complying with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may promulgate, such rules and regulations being framed to include physical, mental, and moral qualifications; and that the Secretary of War is authorized to provide transportation to and from such camps, uniforms, tents and equipment, and all necessary facilities for the care and training in such camps of such high-school students in military tactics; and he shall detail for duty in such camps such officers of the Regular Army, including medical officers, as may be needed to provide suitable superintendence, instruction, and control of such camps; and that the Secretary of War may employ such physicians and surgeons not connected with the military forces of the United States as in his judgment may be necessary to preserve and protect the health of such students while in camp.

The said Secretary of War shall prepare all needful rules and regulations for enlistment of such high-school students for training and for carrying out the provisions of this act: Provided, That all enlistments shall be voluntary, and no boy under the age of 21 years shall be received without the consent of his parents or guardian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. POMERENE. I introduce a bill for appropriate reference.

The bill (S. 3079) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service was read twice by its title.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am having prepared by an actuary certain tables relative to the expense of the plan provided for in the bill that I have just introduced, as well as the expense which would be incurred by the enactment into law of certain other bills which have from time to time been introduced. Upon the receipt of the tables, I shall ask the privilege of addressing the Senate upon the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice of the Senator from Ohio will be entered, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. OWEN. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) for the purpose of making more certain the rules of international law, and for other purposes, was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to invite the nations of the world to send delegates as the guests of the United States to meet in international conference in the city of Washington, D. C., on the first Monday in May, of the year 1916, for the purpose of making more certain and properly declaring the rules of international law, proposing means by which such laws may be enforced, and laying the foundations by which the future peace and happiness of the world may be assured through acceptable international agreement.

Each nation shall be entitled to one delegate and one vote, and one additional delegate and vote for each 5,000,000 of inhabitants or major fraction thereof, not exceeding 20 delegates for any nation. Such international conference shall be had with the understanding that the conference shall not deal with the internal policy of any nation, but exclusively with the rules which should govern international intercourse.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think the joint resolution should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OWEN. I have made that request, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT TO URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the purpose of investigation, treatment, and eradication of rabies in the Rocky Mountain States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (for Mr. WARREN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1412) further to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1412) further to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it will be recalled that toward the close of the last session of Congress a special committee of the Senate was appointed to inquire into certain charges of sinister influences in connection with the so-called ship-purchase bill, the committee being generally referred to as the "Ship-Lobby Committee." I have the honor to submit a report (No. 25) on behalf of the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I submit the views of the minority of the special committee with reference to the matter, and ask that it may be printed in connection with the majority report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

OSAGE RESERVATION LANDS, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OLIVER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4), which was read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to refrain from making any disposition of such quarter-section units of the lands of the Osage Reservation in the State of Oklahoma as have been developed by the Barnsdall Oil Co. and are now producing oil, save the portions thereof which have been accepted by said company for lease to be made direct to it, until further action thereon by Congress, and that said lands, after the expiration of the term of the existing lease, may continue to be operated by the said sublessee, the money arising from the oil produced therefrom, after payment of expenses and royalty, to be held in a Federal depositary to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, pending further action by Congress.

FREIGHT EMBARGO AT NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. WALSH. I submit a resolution, which I ask may lie on the table for the present. If it is reached to-morrow, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit some remarks in relation to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana desire to have the resolution read?

Mr. WALSH. I ask that it may be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 43) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is a notorious fact that for weeks there has been a serious congestion of freight in the terminals and yards of all of the trunk-line railways entering the port of New York City; and

Whereas thousands of loaded freight cars have been standing in said yards and terminals and on sidings of said trunk-line railroads, with great damage and injury to business men and shippers of the country, as well as to the railroads themselves; and

Whereas all or some of the leading trunk-line railroads have declared embargoes upon further shipments of freight into the port of New York; and

Whereas similar conditions are reported as to other ports, and the situation has become so serious as gravely to menace not only our foreign trade but the domestic trade of the country, manufacturing industries having difficulty in receiving supplies of needed raw materials on the one hand and being unable to make prompt shipments of their finished product on the other; and

Whereas shippers throughout the country are suffering delays, inconvenience, and actual losses because of these conditions; and

Whereas it is asserted that the principal reason for such freight congestion and for such railroad embargoes is the lack of ships to carry on the foreign commerce of the United States; and

Whereas the ocean freight rates even on such ships as are available have increased since the outbreak of the European war from normal to as high as fifteen hundred per cent, thus imposing a serious handicap on the commerce of the United States, such ocean freight rates being so high as to preclude foreign commerce in certain articles of American production; and

Whereas American commerce is to-day dependent almost wholly upon ships of foreign registry; and

Whereas such ships are more or less under the control of their respective governments, which, in turn, are quite naturally employing them primarily for the benefit of their interests regardless of the rights and interests of American commerce; and

Whereas the situation has become so grave that it is imperative that all of the facts shall be developed in order that the problem may be fully understood and dealt with: Be it therefore

Resolved, That a special committee of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President of the Senate, with authority to investigate and report upon the existing freight blockade and embargoes on the trunk-line railroads entering the port of New York City, and other ports where like conditions may be disclosed; the reasons for such blockade and embargoes; the effect of the same upon the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States; the extent to which the same is occasioned by a lack of ocean transportation facilities at and from such ports; the reasons for such insufficient shipping or ocean transportation facilities; the ocean freight rates now being charged as compared with the rates existing at the time of the outbreak of the European war in 1914; the extent to which discriminations are being practiced by shipowners and carriers, as between American products and commodities, and the reasons therefor; and, generally, to investigate the shipping conditions as related to any and all of the ports of the United States and as between said ports and foreign countries. Said special committee is hereby given full power and authority to summon witnesses, to compel the production of books and papers, to employ counsel, and to take any and all steps that may be necessary to carry out and effectuate the purposes and objects of this resolution.

Said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is further authorized to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the subject pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and the expenses thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the request of the Senator from Montana in connection with the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That it lie on the table for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection to the resolution taking that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on December 7th last I submitted a resolution, being Senate resolution No. 10, which was ordered to lie over subject to call. I move that the resolution be taken up and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

CONDITION OF JEWS IN COUNTRIES AT WAR.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read, after which I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 45) was read, as follows:

Whereas in the various countries now engaged in war there are nine millions of Jews, the great majority of whom are destitute of food, shelter, and clothing; and

Whereas millions of them have been driven from their homes without warning, deprived of an opportunity to make provision for their most elementary wants, causing starvation, disease and untold suffering; and

Whereas the people of the United States of America have learned with sorrow of this terrible plight of millions of human beings and have most generously responded to the cry for help whenever such an appeal has reached them; Therefore be it

Resolved, That, in view of the misery, wretchedness, and hardships which these nine millions of Jews are suffering, the President of the United States be respectfully asked to designate a day on which the citizens of this country may give expression to their sympathy by contributing to the funds now being raised for the relief of the Jews in the war zones.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there any objection?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Jersey to let the resolution lie on the table until to-morrow.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that there are extenuating circumstances at this particular time for urging this resolution. I feel that there is no race on God Almighty's footstool that has been more persecuted and spat upon than this race of Jews; and yet, during all this time, they have maintained their dignity and self-respect. The sympathetic heart of the American people all over this land has welled up and overflowed in sympathy for them. In the great city of New York and in very many other cities of this country great meetings have been held expressive of sympathy.

This resolution can take but little time; and it does seem to me that if there ever was a time when sympathy was fitting and apropos, that time is now. Questions of dollars and questions of preparedness, as needed as they may be, it seems to me, all fade and fall into insignificance when it comes to the matter of expressing sympathy over a race stricken as has been the Jewish race.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, of course I join no issue with the Senator on the question of sympathy.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize that, sir.

Mr. STONE. I merely asked, for prudential reasons, that the resolution lie on the table until to-morrow morning.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is all right. I may say that I quite willingly acquiesce. I know that the Senator's heart is as big as mine and that he is just as sympathetic.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

HARDT, VON BERNUTH & CO. AND OTHERS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 41), which was read and referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That Senate bill No. 1414, providing for the adjudication by the Court of Claims of the claims of Hardt, Von Bernuth & Co.; F. A. Straus & Co.; Albert Eckstein; Barthels Manufacturing Co.; Dieckerhoff, Raffloer & Co.; Dieckerhoff, Raffloer & Co. (a corporation); G. Hirsch's Sons; Ludwig Littauer; Moeller & Littauer; Naday & Fleischer; William Jonas & Co.; Charles E. Hertlein; G. Robison & Co.; G. Robison, jr.; Paul Puttmann; Imperial Braid Co.; F. B. Vandegrift & Co.; and G. Robison & Son, together with all papers accompanying said bill, be, and is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims to find the facts relating to their claims for refund of import duties paid by them upon artificial silk in excess of the legal duties imposed by law upon artificial silk during the years 1901 to 1909, inclusive, and also to find the conclusions of law and equity applicable to the facts.

REPORT ON AERONAUTICS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 44), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the appendices to the report of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, transmitted with the President's message of December 15, 1915, be printed as a Senate document.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. THOMAS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 46), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Woman Suffrage, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same are hereby, authorized, during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, and to employ such assistants as may be required to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee or under investigation or examination thereby; that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

JOHN A. MUSE.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 47), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas John A. Muse was appointed on the United States Senate rolls as a laborer January 16, 1897, at a salary of $720 a year, and assigned to the Maltby Building as a watchman; and

Whereas in the discharge of his duties the said John A. Muse was injured permanently and was discharged from the service of the Senate during the month of April, 1901: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said John A. Muse be, and is hereby, placed upon the rolls of the Senate of the United States at the salary he received at the time of his discharge on account of permanent injury sustained while in the service of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to give notice of a proposed amendment to the rules.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the amendment ought to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXV of the standing rules of the Senate shall be amended as follows:

Insert after the paragraph which reads "A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to consist of five Senators," a new paragraph to read as follows:

"A Committee on Roads, to consist of 17 Senators, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation relating to the construction and maintenance of roads."

ADDRESS BY DR. HUNT.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a very able address delivered by Dr. Thomas Forsyth Hunt, dean of the College of Agriculture, University of California, before the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges, of Los Angeles, and before the Farm Management Association at the University of California, August 9, 1915, on the subject of "The relation of a permanent agriculture to social welfare." It is a very important paper, and I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration, with a view that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

DISTRIBUTION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have also some hearings which include statements made by Mr. David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, by certain post-office officials, and by certain representatives of Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward & Co., all bearing on a proposal to establish a system partaking somewhat of a combination plan of mail-order houses and incorporation with the Parcel Post System, whereby the producers and consumers of farm products may be brought in direct touch. It is a very important portion of a general scheme for furthering the economic distribution of farm products, and I think it is a matter of great interest to all the people of the country. I ask that the paper be referred to the Committee on Printing, with a view to its publication as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

PLAN OF CONSTRUCTIVE DEFENSE.

Mr. WORKS. I have here an article on preparedness and national defense entitled "Invincible America." It is quite an interesting paper and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INVINCIBLE AMERICA: A PLAN OF CONSTRUCTIVE DEFENSE.

(By Harry G. Traver.)

HOW AMERICA CAN HAVE A LARGE ARMY OF TRAINED MEN WITHOUT WASTE OF MEN AND MONEY.

There are two sides to the army question. Peace advocates ask why we should maintain a hundred thousand men in practical idleness, waste their time on useless effort, waste the money spent on their equipment and maintenance, and develop a large class of men who have few ideals except to kill the enemies of their country.

The advocates of a large army ask: How can we be prepared to defend our great country with its thousands of miles of coast line, our cities, and our homes without keeping up a large army and a proper reserve who are trained to fight? How can we, they ask, ignore the fact that great nations call treaties "only scraps of paper"? How can we defend the Monroe doctrine? How can we maintain our national dignity when great disputes arise? How can we defend ourselves from a foreign foe who may land on our shores with a great army when we have barely 50,000 men to-day who could take the field? That number is scarcely larger than a single army corps of the nations now engaged in the death struggle in Europe. As for the protection offered us by the Atlantic Ocean, distances to-day are so short on water that two of the chief naval battles of the present war were fought twice as far away from Europe as the distance across the Atlantic.

All attempts to solve this problem have failed. Thousands of earnest and patriotic men in the State militia and in the Regular Army have labored faithfully against serious difficulties to build up dependable organizations, and in many cases they have succeeded. In the Civil War and in the Spanish-American War there were units which performed wonderful services. But there has been a tremendous change in the conditions of warfare since that time. To send a small army of militia who are unaccustomed to the hardships of war against the seasoned and well-trained troops of other great nations would be nothing less than criminal slaughter. To send the Regular Army is out of the question, as it contains at present only 86,000 men in all, most of whom are necessary to defend the insular possessions and to man the fortifications and Army posts.

Now, the Regular Army already costs $100,000,000 per year, or $1,160 per year per man, which is from two to four times the cost per man of the army of any other nation. The militia, too, is very expensive, though it is not completely trained nor equipped for active service. To increase the Regular Army and the militia to what is considered adequate size, and to place each in a proper condition for service, will cost this country at least $400,000,000 per year, or more than any other country on earth. To remedy the existing defects and to meet the needs of the United States for an adequate army without wasting a dollar or a man is the object of the new system here offered.

The new system consists simply in developing on a large scale the method found so successful in building the great Panama Canal, namely, place the great reclamation projects, the great road-building schemes, the great Mississippi River improvement, and other great and much-needed public works under the control of the United States Army Engineers. Give these engineers an army of young men who can handle a pick and shovel, live in the open, drive mules, load wagons, operate motor trucks, and do such work and live such a life as that required of a soldier. That the Army Engineers built and completed successfully and economically the greatest engineering feat of modern times at Panama, after other agencies had failed, is sufficient proof that they are equal to this new task. At Panama it was necessary to hire foreign labor on account of the climate, but in this country the common soldier can do all of the work.

Soldiers will be enlisted with this end in view from the very start. They will constitute a vast industrial army under the control of the War Department; there will be important work for every man from the officer down to the rawest recruit; and all the men being profitably employed, it will be possible to maintain an army of 500,000 or more with a mere fraction of the loss and waste that is common under our present system.

These men will be enlisted for a period of several years. The pay and other conditions will be made attractive enough to get sufficient good men and no more. The work will be conducted under the regular discipline of the Army. The men will live in portable houses or camps at the various places where the work is being done throughout the country. The outdoor work and life will tend to harden the men to the life of a soldier. Every day an hour or more will be devoted to drill and other military training. On Saturdays extensive maneuvers will be practiced. Here, then, in a nutshell is the scheme which will train a million men in a few years at very little more expense than the cost of the great engineering works on which the men are employed.

That a limited amount of practical but thorough training is very effective in time of war was proven by the experience of the Germans a century ago. In 1809 the Germans were crushed by Napoleon, who forced them to agree to limit their army thereafter to 42,000 men. Germany kept her word, but cleverly arranged her system so that the men only served for a short time and then gave place to others. Thousands upon thousands were put through the army quickly, and out again, till Germany soon had a vast array of trained men ready to help accomplish the downfall of Napoleon in 1815.

The great public works herein contemplated are such as have been discussed and advocated for many years. We Americans have a tremendous country, yet there is not to-day a single highway extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific worthy of the name. The roads of the West and of the South are abominable. Even in the East, where millions have been spent on roads in recent years, only the main thoroughfares are suitable for modern traffic. The annual losses due to bad roads in America run into millions and millions of dollars. The days of the motor truck and the automobile are here. Farmers, truckmen, and business men all over this country are crying out for better roads. So far there has been but feeble answer. To build these roads will cost thousands of millions. There is no agency so capable for this great task as the National Government. Road building by the various counties and States has resulted to-day in a heterogeneous system of roads of all kinds and in all conditions, which are in most cases supervised by politicians who have little knowledge of road engineering, and, in consequence, the work has been turned over in many cases to selfish contractors, whose business it is to get enormous profits and put into the roads as little as possible of material and labor. The idea of making a road that would be durable for years to come is of no interest to them. There are engineers in the United States Army who can build roads as fine as any of the world. They are not handicapped by political affiliations. They are not burdened with a selfish desire to squeeze out the profit of a fat contractor. They are governed by the ironclad rule of Army discipline. The simple, practical, and economical solution of the highway problem is to turn it over to the United States Army.

The Mississippi and Ohio River systems call for effective and immediate improvement. The direct annual loss from floods runs into millions, to say nothing of tremendous indirect losses to trade and transportation. This great work will cost at least $500,000,000. The present annual losses would more than pay the interest on the entire cost of the work. The territory involved covers many States. No State can or should undertake it. It is outside the field of private enterprise. The National Government alone has the necessary authority and the financial ability to handle it. Much of the work which has been done up to date has been done as a political sop to the various sections through which these rivers pass. The work should be taken out of politics and turned over to the United States Army engineers. If they do as well as they did at the Panama, the whole Nation will rejoice.

The great reclamation projects have proved the ability of the United States Government to carry on great works of this character. During 10 years the area of irrigated land in this country was doubled, largely through these Government irrigation systems. Who knows what might be accomplished if the Army were put into this field for 20 years? This work should be continued and enlarged by the industrial army.

There are other great works needing attention, though not quite so urgent. The inland coastwise canal along the Atlantic seaboard, the draining of the vast swamp areas, the improvement of the national forests, and the building of the new Government railway in Alaska can all be done by the new army.

Not only can the National Government do this work efficiently, but by purchasing supplies in enormous quantities it can do the work more economically than the small contractors can in local districts.

What kind of an army will this system produce? It must necessarily produce the best army in the world. No army in history has been so effective as the army composed of citizen soldiers when they were properly trained and physically able to endure the hardships of war. Our new industrial army will be an efficient force, well trained, always mobilized, always ready. It will be made up of hearty young fellows, accustomed to hard life in the open. They can stand the rain and snow, the cold and heat. They will be accustomed to the use of pick and shovel, to earthworks, to concrete construction, to motor trucks, automobile tractors, and other machinery. They will be used to discipline, to working in squads, both large and small units. They will develop individual initiative. They will be accustomed to being shifted about from place to place, to hard physical labor, to hard foot and leg work, and to carrying necessary equipment. The officers will be men who can really command, who as foremen, superintendents, and managers of departments have seen real field service. They will be officers who can take responsibility and who have been weighed in the balance and not found wanting.

This army will be put through military drill an hour or more every day except Sunday. On Saturday it will practice field maneuvers and once each year it will take part in large units in operations on a large scale. There will be an educational department, wherein the men can study certain fundamental things necessary to the ideal life of a soldier. This will include hygiene, first aid to the injured, geography, horsemanship, motor-truck driving, track laying, bridge work, and military tactics.

A man who can successfully drive a motor truck in building a wagon road would make an ideal man to drive the same truck in time of war. The ability to get there promptly under adverse conditions and to keep his truck moving properly are the requirements in each case. The same may be said of handling teams, wagons, and supplies. A man who can dig ditches and drains for roads and culverts can dig trenches. Battles are not always fought on macadamized roads. They are more likely to be fought on rain-soaked fields, over ditches, hills and valleys, through ice and snow, across streams, and through difficulties in general more like those of the road builder than anything else. Battles are never fought on the dance floor of a regimental armory, nor on the well-kept lawns of an army post. It is said the life of a horse or a motor truck in the present European war is often not more than a week, and that at the beginning of the war this was often due to carelessness in handling or to the inability of inexperienced men to make slight adjustments. How foolish it is, then, to put trucks in charge of any but men trained to handle them in actual service.

The men of our industrial army would travel about the country more or less and would become familiar with the climate, topography, local customs, and other conditions of the different sections of the country, so that in time of invasion there would be officers and men in every regiment familiar with the physical difficulties to be met with, and they would avoid such disasters as those of history which were caused by ignorance of local conditions. Napoleon's disastrous retreat from Moscow and his defeat at Waterloo would not have happened to our industrial army.

The soldiers of this army will be paid better wages than the present Regular Army, and they will earn the money. Their food and other supplies will be suitable for men doing hard physical labor and living out of doors. Their houses will be portable structures, quickly moved from place to place. No more Army posts should be built like the present establishments, except to be used as places of storage for Army supplies.

What would be the mental and moral development of these men? Better than at present. Men who are engaged in a great enterprise will have a higher sense of self-esteem and a greater personal interest in their work than they have if they spend their time in the ordinary monotonous routine of army life. Unfortunately there has often been a prejudice against the soldier in uniform in time of peace. Congress even passed a law in 1911 forbidding discrimination against the uniformed soldier by theaters and other places of entertainment. When these men are engaged on great public works and paid reasonable wages they will be respected and esteemed as highly in time of peace as in time of war.

Under the old system men often find it difficult to get work after their discharge from the Army, because their whole life in the service has made them unadapted either by experience or disposition to work in civil life. Under the new system the men will gain practical knowledge of many useful trades. Regular habits of industry and the rigid discipline of their training will make them the best and most efficient workers for civil life. Employers are always seeking men who have such habits and training at good wages.

A great national reserve will develop from this army. Men should serve in the Regular Army for the period of their enlistment, and they may then reenlist at advanced pay or be retired to the first reserve, which will meet yearly for the maneuvers. They will have their expenses paid during this meeting and will be paid for their time. The reserve is subject to call only in time of war. After serving for a period of years in the first reserve, they will then be retired to the second reserve, which is not called out unless the first reserve is inadequate.

This system need not be installed all at once. Like the rural free delivery, it can be started on a small scale and increased gradually till it supersedes the present Army.

The individual States may keep their present system of militia till the National Army is well established and work progressing on many projects. They will then either abandon the State militia entirely or copy the National Army for State use.

Some work will be done in every State, but only as part of a comprehensive plan wherever and whenever most needed and according to plans worked out under the efficient eyes of the Army Engineers; not in the extravagant fashion of the annual river and harbor appropriations. Thus will be found a solution of the old pork-barrel system from which most of our Congressmen will be glad to get away, if it can be done gracefully. Here is their chance.

A balance wheel to national industry can be created out of this industrial army. The time is now here when something more effective than the present methods must be provided to cope with the problem of the unemployed during periods of business depression. The new army system offers a practical solution, for the same reason that it solves the problems of great public improvements, namely, because only the National Government is large enough to handle the proposition.

A watch needs a balance wheel to make its movements regular. Likewise a clock needs a pendulum. A waterworks needs a reservoir to conserve the supply over periods of plenty and scarcity. A farmer provides barns and feed to carry his stock over periods of nonproduction. A successful business house keeps on hand or in bank a reserve supply of cash to protect it during periods of reduced income. But a great Nation with 90,000,000 of people has never taken the trouble to provide a practical method of absorbing its surplus labor during slack times, nor thought it worth while to care for the idle human beings who must be fed and sheltered no matter whether employed or not.

When the stock or bonds of a reputable corporation are offered too freely on the stock exchange or fall a few points in price, there is started a buying movement which "supports the market" and takes up the surplus stock. When the country produces more wheat than can be consumed at home, it is "absorbed" by Europe. When an American corporation produces more steel or harvesters, sewing machines, or watches than can be sold in the home market, they are "dumped abroad." But when a financial crisis arises which destroys the confidence of business men the country over, nearly everybody gets scared, people stop buying goods they can do without, trade falls off, employees are discharged by the hundreds, and wages fall in many industries. There is then a surplus of labor.

Unfortunately there is no support to the labor market; it can not be "absorbed" by Europe; it can not be "dumped abroad." It can not even be stored in warehouses like surplus cotton and corn. Surplus labor is a living, moving, breathing reality different from all other commodities. It is composed of human beings who must eat and sleep and be clothed, and though we have devised systems for disposing of every other kind of surplus, all efforts to take care of the surplus labor have proved fruitless.

As the new reserve banking system was devised to provide a balance wheel for the money market by providing an elastic currency during varying business conditions, so the industrial army can be made to balance the labor market. This operation is very simple. Congress, or the President, or the War Department should have power during bad industrial periods of increasing the industrial army by new recruits in a special class, who are enlisted for only a short period, perhaps one year. The number of men taken in this way should be limited only by the extent of the business depression and the consequent labor surplus. It might rise as high as half a million men, but would probably never do so. These men should always receive the regular military training and should be put in the national reserve after their term of enlistment expires. They may be released from service in less than one year if the regular industries of the country demand them sooner.

Most of the unemployed are single men, which makes them especially adapted to this system. Employers usually aim to keep their oldest, steadiest, and best men even during dull times, and this includes men generally with families. Even married men will be better off to join the army temporarily than to starve or accept charity. They will be fed, clothed, and housed in the army and all of their wages can be sent home to their families, whom they can visit often, as they will not be far from them.

Only a small number of men will probably be taken into the army during a depression. The mere fact that the army is ready to employ them is sufficient. When the Government puts its stamp on a paper dollar few people ever take it to the Treasury to have it redeemed. The mere fact that the Government is ready to redeem it is sufficient. So with labor. When the Government stands ready to redeem or employ every man who applies, few will apply. Why? Simply because employers will know that the sale of their products will not decrease through bad business, and therefore they will keep their employees themselves.

The wages of this special army would not be so high as to keep them out of the regular industries when the period of depression is passed. It would be a simple matter to employ them all, as the Army engineers would always have projects under way scattered over the entire country on which many extra men could be used economically. In case of a mere local disturbance the work can be provided only in that particular section. The money for this special operation would come from bond issues. During industrial depressions much money is withdrawn by timid persons from the various channels of trade and either hoarded or put into postal savings banks or similar places. This money could be at such times invested in Government bonds, and through the expenditures on the special industrial army it would at once flow back into the channels of business.

Here, then, is the balance wheel for labor. All the men who want work and can not find it elsewhere can find it in the army. If these men do not stop earning, they likewise will not stop consuming. Where there is no stoppage of consumption there can be little stoppage of production. Therefore, the hesitating wheels of industry will revolve and confidence will be quickly restored. If there is unlimited demand for wheat, the price of wheat will not decline below a certain point. So, if there is an unlimited demand ready to absorb the surplus labor, wages will not decline below a certain level, neither will business men become frightened by a financial crisis. They will know if all the men in the country are continually employed that the consuming public is ever and always practically unchanged. They will know if the materials and supplies used in one industry are decreased that there will be a corresponding increase in other lines, for the total number of workers in the whole country will not be allowed to decrease.

How much self-respect and manliness will be saved to the workers themselves can not be measured in dollars and cents. The army may in this way absorb the men who might otherwise become part of the flotsam and jetsam of city and town out of a job and out of a home. It will keep them out of soup houses and lodging houses. It will keep them from becoming vagabonds or charity applicants. It will give them self-respecting work and pay them decent wages for it, better wages, in fact, than are often paid in some industries. Their work will be efficient and effective under the discipline of trained officers and according to well-defined plans of the Army engineers. There could be no better work found for men who have lost their grip or lost their jobs than a year under the discipline of the industrial army.

Labor unions will receive practical help from this system, especially those comprising labor which is poorly paid and which is most affected by periods of depression and by competition of cheap labor. The new system will tend to establish a minimum wage, though not in the way usually intended and with none of the possible ill effects of a minimum wage law. Employers will profit as well, for if there are no unemployed, the purchasing power of the public will be unimpaired and there can be no long and serious depressions in business, such as cripple and ruin many an employer at present.

Suppose it does cost a few hundred millions to operate this system and thereby avert the consequence of a financial panic. The money will all go into legitimate public improvements which are worth all that they cost, national industries will be saved from a long period of stagnation, and there will be a great saving to charity; but the greatest benefit of all, which can not be measured in money, will be the self-respect and habit of industry which will be saved or created for the thousands of men who would otherwise become recipients of charity.

To sum up the advantages of this new army system, it will—

1. Provide an adequate standing army.
2. Provide a suitable trained reserve.
3. Improve the morale of the soldier.
4. Build up our great public works.
5. Fit the soldier for conditions of war.
6. Provide for surplus labor in hard times.
7. Relieve one of the causes of depression.
8. Retain the self-respect of the unemployed.
9. Give the American people value received for every dollar spent on the army.

This, then, is the new American army. Their weapons are not weapons of death, but picks and shovels, hammers and drills; the tools of thrift and industry, the instruments of peace. They are conquerors not of men but of the great forces of nature. Soldiers not of battle but soldiers of the great common good. How every American bosom will swell with pride at the sight of such an army. The pride of every American in the Panama Canal will be reflected and reechoed in every great highway and river from coast to coast. And when the time comes, if it does come, to repel a foreign foe, these men will be fitted by their training and experience to fight for their country as well as any army that every took the field.

GENERAL NAVY BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 231).

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the report of the General Board, Department of the Navy, of July 30, which was given out by the department on Christmas, and which is unobtainable, the department sending me the last copy in their possession, may be printed for the use of the Senate. It consists of only two pages, and it is very important, of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I send to the desk an address delivered before the Seventh Annual Convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, of Charleston, S. C., December 16, 1915, by Daniel C. Roper, First Assistant Postmaster General. It pertains exclusively to post-office matters. I desire to have it referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to its publication at a later date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his clerks, announced that the President had approved and signed the following joint resolutions and act:

On December 17, 1915:

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes.

On December 18, 1915:

S. J. Res. 56. Joint resolution extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States.

S. 696. An act authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.

PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION OF GASOLINE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I submit a resolution requesting certain information from the Secretary of the Interior, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 40) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish the Senate, for its use, such information as his department may have on the production, consumption, and price of gasoline, as follows:

1. The total amount of gasoline produced in the United States each year since 1900.
2. The amount of gasoline consumed in the United States each year during said period.
3. The several fields of production in the United States and the amount produced in each field during said period.
4. What has been the prevailing wholesale price of crude oil at the several fields of production each year during said period?
5. What fields, and to what extent, are becoming exhausted?
6. What new fields have been developed during said period, and the production of such new fields?
7. What known fields or areas are yet undeveloped, and what are their possibilities for oil and gasoline production in the United States and elsewhere?
8. What new method or methods have been evolved to increase the percentage of gasoline produced from the crude oil or to cheapen the cost of production in any way?
9. To what new uses have gasoline and petroleum or coal oil been applied during the said period?
10. So far as the records of his department will disclose, what has been the production and consumption of gasoline in the world outside of the United States each year during said period?
11. To what extent have the war conditions in Europe influenced the production and consumption of gasoline?
12. What cause, if any, can be given for the sudden, extraordinary rise in the retail price of gasoline.
13. To what extent has the interior combustion engine been responsible for the increased consumption of gasoline, and what has been the extent of the increase of such engines and their general uses during said period, with special reference to number and increase of stationary engines, farm traction engines, automobiles, and motor boats, etc.?
14. Any other information which may be useful or beneficial in the consideration of the subject of production and consumption of gasoline.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there any objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I was not able to follow the reading of the resolution carefully. I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if it includes an inquiry into the existence of fields not now producing or limited in their production because of the deficiencies in the public-land laws?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state to the Senator that it does include such a report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the resolution contemplate an investigation hereafter to be made by the department, or merely call for information now in the possession of the department?

Mr. McCUMBER. It simply calls for information for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not empower the department to make an investigation?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; that would be without the rule of a Senate resolution. It is simply for information, and upon that information there may be an investigation by the proper committee of the Senate. It is very proper, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it a Senate resolution or a joint resolution?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is a Senate resolution only.

Mr. President, I should like to present the following figures in reference to this subject, indicating the necessity for the passage of a resolution of this kind.

It appears from the reports of the Geological Survey that the estimate of the 1915 output of petroleum was 267,400,000 barrels. That is 2,000,000 barrels more than the 1914 output. The production activity during 1915, according to the report, was purposely retarded. Crude petroleum nevertheless held in reserve increased in 1915 about 50,000,000 barrels, and at present there are 220,000,000 barrels held in reserve. During the 10 months ending October, 1915, there were exported 98,471,466 barrels, while during the same period of last year the export amounted to 140,275,273 barrels. From April to August the petroleum ranged in price at $1.35 a barrel. By December 17 it had risen to $2.15 per barrel. Thus it will be seen that the production of 1915 as estimated was considerably in excess of the production of the previous year; that the crude petroleum held in reserve was very much higher than in previous years; and that at the present time it amounts to the enormous sum of 220,000,000 barrels. During 1915 the export of petroleum was very much less than during the previous year, and notwithstanding all of this it seems that petroleum has almost doubled in value within the past two or three months.

Now, there may be some very valid reason for this that is not indicated in the report. If our fields are about to play out the American people ought to know something about it as speedily as possible. If this rise is due to some understanding or combination, irrespective of the amount of production, we are equally entitled to information upon that subject.

I have made the resolution as broad as possible to secure information that will enable us to determine ourselves the cause of the very sudden rise in the cost of an article so universally used by the American people.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am entirely in sympathy with the purpose stated by the Senator from North Dakota, and I do not doubt that very great information can be furnished by the Secretary of the Interior. But I think in order to get clear information an inquiry should also be made of the Department of Justice, because I am informed that a great amount of petroleum produced is now under injunction under suits by the Government and that other great amounts are held because there is no purchaser of that particular oil. I simply make that suggestion in this connection.

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume that in the broader language of the resolution the Secretary of the Interior, through the Geological Survey, will have notice of that fact, and that that information will appear in the report which will be sent to us.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My only purpose was to make the information full.

Mr. WALSH. I have had an opportunity to go over the resolution offered by the Senator from North Dakota, and the specific information which I think the Senate ought to have in connection with this matter will, I think, not be called for by any of the stipulations of it except the last, which is to this effect:

Any other information that may be useful or beneficial in the consideration of the subject of production and consumption of gasoline.

I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota, and I have no doubt he will concur, that following there might be very appropriately added:

And particularly what fields are now unproductive or limited in their production because of deficiencies in the laws in relation to the disposition of public lands containing deposits of oil and what areas have been withdrawn from entry to await action by Congress.

I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I welcome the amendment offered by the Senator if he thinks that the several propositions in the resolution do not cover the point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. OWEN. The House of Representatives passed a bill, House bill 3681, which is the same as Senate bill 1409, which has been favorably reported. It is a bill for the construction of a bridge at Tulsa, Okla. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. FALL. I shall not object to that if the Senator will first allow me to introduce in regular order a Senate resolution that it may be read and lie on the table.

Mr. OWEN. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. FALL. I have no other purpose in objecting to unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. FALL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 42), which was read:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the Senate upon the following subjects and to transmit to the Senate the documents, letters, reports, orders, etc., hereinafter referred to.

First. Is there a government now existing in the Republic of Mexico; and, if so,

Second. Is such Government recognized by this Government; how is such Government maintained and where; who is now the recognized head of such Government and is the same a constitutional Government?

Third. By what means was the recognition of any Government in Mexico brought about and what proceedings, if any, were followed prior to and resulting in recognition, in any conference between this country and Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Guatemala, and any other country or countries?

Fourth. What assurances has the Government of Mexico given this Government as to its course in protecting American lives and property in Mexico and in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California; and, if such assurances have been given, what evidence has this Government of the ability of such Government to fulfill its promises and obligations in the premises?

Fifth. What orders or instructions have been issued to our officials and armed forces on or near the Mexican border for the protection of the lives, property, and peace of American citizens along said border.

Sixth. What assurances have been received from the Mexican Government, or requested by this Government, as to payment of American damage claims for injury to life or property of our citizens resulting from the acts of Mexico, or citizens of that country, within the past five years.

Seventh. What assurances have been given by the Mexican Government as to the protection of foreigners and citizens, and particularly in the free exercise of their religion in public or in private.

Eighth. Reports of the Brazilian Minister to Mexico, made to this Government by letter or otherwise, while said minister was representing this Government in Mexico; also reports of American consuls and consular representatives in Mexico during the past four years, together with reports from any special or other sources of information available or in hand, concerning or relating to Mexican affairs and conditions or to Mexican officials or military and factional leaders, reports of the actions of the Red Cross in Mexico, and their reports to this Government.

Ninth. Data, letters, and reports relating to the closing of the port of El Paso and reopening same to importations of meat from Juarez, and also to the setting aside or revocation of any decrees or orders of Villa concerning mining property.

Tenth. Information concerning the occupation of Vera Cruz by our land and naval forces, duration of such occupation, our administration of affairs during such occupancy, and the date and cause of the evacuation of Vera Cruz, with all correspondence concerning such evacuation.

Mr. FALL. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask what was the request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]?

Mr. OWEN. There is a bill providing for the construction of a bridge over the Arkansas River at Tulsa, Okla., which passed the House, and a similar bill has been favorably reported by the Senate committee. It is a very short bill, consisting of only a few lines, and I ask consent to have it passed, because the parties are in stress waiting for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall not object; but I think we ought to go on and finish the regular morning business. I shall insist on doing that after the Senator from Oklahoma has presented his bill.

Mr. OWEN. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 3681) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Tulsa, Okla., was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask whether the bill has been reported from a committee of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. It was reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce, and I am moving now the passage of this bill in lieu of the Senate bill in the same words.

Mr. SMOOT. On what page of the calendar is the Senate bill noted?

Mr. OWEN. It was reported this morning. It is Senate bill 1409. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] reported the bill favorably.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senate bill, I understand, is identical with the House bill which has been read by title.

Mr. OWEN. It is identical.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the indefinite postponement of Senate bill 1409. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 136. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

H. R. 4717. An act to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River.

MANUFACTURE OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now proceed to consider Senate bill 381, known as the Philippine bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest that there ought to be some disposition of the resolutions which lie on the table. I may be wrong, but I am under the impression that they come up automatically.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled, and the ruling was not appealed from, at the last session of the Senate that they do not come up automatically; that they may be called up, however, by any Senator who wishes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was under a misapprehension. I desire to give notice that one week from to-day, at the close of the regular routine morning business of the Senate, I shall make some observations upon Senate resolution 20, which now lies on the table. I rose only for the purpose of giving that notice or making some disposition of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There were no resolutions laid on the Presiding Officer's table at the last session which were taken up without being called up. It was found that there was no rule which provided that they should be laid down by the Chair, and the ruling then was that any Senator who had introduced a resolution which had gone over would have the right before the close of morning business to call up the resolution if he desired so to do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no interest in the matter. I thought the rule provided that they should be laid before the Senate, but that may apply only to the following day after the resolution has been introduced.

Mr. LODGE. They go over under objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. One day.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule provides that resolutions shall go over on objection, but it does not provide that the Presiding Officer shall lay them before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not insist upon any ruling on this point, because all I desire to do now is to give the notice.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 381.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether it is his intention to press the bill or seek final action on it to-day, because the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], who I know takes very great interest in this measure and is a member of the committee, is absent, and I know he desires to discuss the bill. I should like myself to say something very briefly on it; I shall take but a few moments. I wanted to know whether the Senator expected to press it to a vote to-day. I thought perhaps he would be willing to have it read and the amendments considered and allow it to go over until to-morrow at least, so that there would be an opportunity for some discussion on the part of those who care to discuss it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Replying to the Senator from Massachusetts, I will say that I have no desire—and I think no member of the committee has any desire—to in any way interfere with Senators who wish to speak upon this bill. My purpose now is to get the bill before the Senate as the unfinished business. Personally, I shall have but little to say upon it at this time. I should like, however, to have it taken up and read for committee amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection whatever to that. It was only because I knew the Senator from Rhode Island desired to be heard upon it that I made the suggestion. I should like to say something myself, and I shall speak very briefly on some of the general features of the bill. I only wanted to find out whether it was the intention to press the bill to a vote to-day, because, if it is going over, I shall prefer to speak to-morrow, and I think the Senator from Rhode Island may then be able to return.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no intention to ask for a vote on the bill to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he would allow the consideration of amendments to the bill to go over, and for this reason: The Senator from Rhode Island, being a member of the committee which has had consideration of the bill, I know is deeply interested in some of those very amendments and desires to speak upon them. I think it would be unjust to him to have the Senate pass on them to-day, because I am sure he desires to be heard on those amendments, as well as upon the bill itself. I therefore ask the Senator from Nebraska to have the bill read and then to make whatever remarks he desires to make to-day, or that any other Senator who desires to speak may do so, and then that the bill and amendments go over.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is the Senator from Utah advised when the Senator from Rhode Island will return?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not definitely informed, but I think he will be here to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have just learned that the Senator from Rhode Island is detained from the Chamber by illness, but I know he will return as soon as possible.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no assurance, then, that the Senator from Rhode Island will be here to-morrow?

Mr. LODGE. I have not any assurance that he will be here to-morrow, for I do not know whether he will be well enough to come. There is no desire whatever to delay the bill, so far as anyone on this side is concerned. I know the Senator from Rhode Island does not desire to delay it, but wishes to be heard upon it. I hope the Senator will, therefore, have the bill read; and if any Senator desires to discuss it, that he will have the opportunity to do so, but that the Senator will not press the bill to a vote to-day or attempt to dispose of all the amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that there is no desire on my part or on the part of any other Senator on this side of the Chamber to delay the consideration of the bill or a vote upon it; but I feel that the Senator from Rhode Island, who is the active member of that committee on this side of the Chamber and who has taken more interest in the measure than any other Senator on this side, should be here when the amendments are being considered and before the passage of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in view of the statements of Senators and also because of the knowledge that I have of the deep interest which the Senator from Rhode Island has in this bill, I shall be very glad to delay as far as possible a procedure on the bill until the Senator from Rhode Island returns, if it is within a short time. I will ask now to have the bill read, but I desire to give notice that I should like to have the committee amendments considered to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there is no objection on the part of any Senator that I know of to making the bill the unfinished business. That can be done to-day. Of course, if the Senator occupies the time until 2 o'clock, automatically the bill would become the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines such an increasing control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without in the meantime impairing the sovereignty of the United States, in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence, which it is the purpose of the United States to grant when, in the judgment of the United States, the people of the Philippine Islands shall have shown themselves to be fitted therefor: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act and the name "The Philippines" as used in this act shall apply to and include the Philippine Islands ceded to the United States Government by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April, 1899, the boundaries of which are set forth in article 3 of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900.

SEC. 2. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in said islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States except such as have become citizens of some other country: Provided, That the Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized to provide by law for the acquisition of Philippine citizenship by those natives of the Philippine Islands who do not come within the foregoing provisions, the natives of the insular possessions of the United States, and such other persons residing in the Philippine Islands who could become citizens of the United States under the laws of the United States if residing therein.

SEC. 3. That no law shall be enacted in said islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the laws. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

That in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be heard by himself and counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf.

That no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without due process of law; and no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

That all persons shall before conviction be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses.

That no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted.

That no person shall be imprisoned for debt.

That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion, insurrection, or invasion the public safety may require it, in either of which events the same may be suspended by the President, or by the Governor General, wherever during such period the necessity for such suspension shall exist.

That no ex post facto law or bill of attainder shall be enacted nor shall the law of primogeniture ever be in force in the Philippines.

That no law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted, and no person holding any office of profit or trust in said islands, shall, without the consent of the Congress of the United States, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, queen, prince, or foreign State.

That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

That the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.

That no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the person or things to be seized.

That slavery shall not exist in said islands; nor shall involuntary servitude exist therein except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

That no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for redress of grievances.

That no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed; and no religious test shall be required for the exercise of civil or political rights. No public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, or used, directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary or sectarian institution as such. Polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

That no money shall be paid out of the treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law.

That the rule of taxation in said islands shall be uniform.

That no bill which may be enacted into law shall embrace more than one subject, and that subject shall be expressed in the title of the bill.

That all money collected on any tax levied or assessed for a special purpose shall be treated as a special fund in the treasury and paid out for such purposes only.

SEC. 4. That all expenses that may be incurred on account of the government of the Philippines for salaries of officials and the conduct of their offices and departments, and all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the islands, not, however, including defenses, barracks, and other works undertaken by the United States, shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by the Congress, be paid by the government of the Philippines.

SEC. 5. That the statutory laws of the United States hereafter enacted shall not apply to the Philippine Islands, except when they specifically so provide, or it is so provided in this act.

SEC. 6. That the laws now in force in the Philippines shall continue in force and effect, except as altered, amended, or modified herein, until altered, amended, or repealed by the legislative authority herein provided or by act of Congress of the United States.

SEC. 7. That the legislative authority herein provided shall have power, when not inconsistent with this act, by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law, civil or criminal, continued in force by this act as it may from time to time see fit.

This power shall specifically extend with the limitation herein provided as to the tariff to all laws relating to revenue and taxation in effect in the Philippines.

SEC. 8. That general legislative power, except as otherwise herein provided, is hereby granted to the Philippine Legislature, authorized by this act.

SEC. 9. That all the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain, signed December 10, 1898, except such land or other property as has been or shall be designated by the President of the United States for military or other reservations of the Government of the United States, and all lands which may have been subsequently acquired by the government of the Philippine Islands by purchase under the provisions of sections 63 and 64 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, except such as may have heretofore been sold and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress, are hereby placed under the control of the government of said islands to be administered or disposed of for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, and the Philippine Legislature shall have power to legislate with respect to all such matters as it may deem advisable: but acts of the Philippine Legislature providing for the disposition or concessions in respect of land, timber, and mining rights, being part of the public domain, hereafter enacted, shall not have the force of law until approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That upon the approval of such an act by the Governor General, it shall be by him forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, and he shall approve or disapprove the same within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved: Provided further, That where lands in the Philippine Islands have been or may be reserved for any public purpose of the United States, and, being no longer required for the purpose for which reserved, have been or may be, by order of the President, placed under the control of the government of said islands to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, the order of the President shall be regarded as effectual to give the government of said islands full control and power to administer and dispose of such lands for the benefit of the inhabitants of said islands.

SEC. 10. That, while this act provides that the Philippine government shall have the authority to enact a tariff law, the trade relations between the islands and the United States shall continue to be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States: Provided, That tariff acts or acts amendatory to the tariff of the Philippine Islands shall not become law until they shall receive the approval of the President of the United States, nor shall any act of the Philippine Legislature affecting immigration into the islands, or the currency or coinage laws of the Philippines become a law until it has been approved by the President of the United States: Provided further, That the President shall approve or disapprove any act mentioned in the foregoing proviso within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved.

SEC. 11. That taxes and assessments on property and license fees for franchises, and privileges, and internal taxes, direct or indirect, may be imposed for the purpose of the Philippine government and the provincial and municipal governments thereof, respectively, as may be provided and defined by acts of the Philippine Legislature, and, where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by the Philippine government or any provincial or municipal government therein, as may be provided by law and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That the entire indebtedness of the Philippine government created by the authority conferred therein shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $17,000,000, nor that of any Province or municipality a sum in excess of 5 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property at any one time, except the city of Manila, in which case the limit shall be 7 per cent: Provided, however, That within the limit thus fixed the Philippine government may make loans to Provinces and municipalities, and may, on the evidence of such loans, issue bonds to the amounts thereof without reference to the limitation herein fixed to the indebtedness of the Philippine government: And provided further, That no public indebtedness of the Philippine government or of any Province or municipality thereof shall be authorized, except with the specific approval of the President of the United States; and all bonds issued by the Philippine government, or by its authority, shall be exempt from taxation by the Government of the United States, or by the government of the Philippines, or of any political or municipal subdivision thereof, or by any State, or by any county, municipality, or other municipal subdivision of any State or Territory of the United States, or by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 12. That in case of the issue of bonds by any Province or municipality of the Philippine Islands, or in case of the issue by the Philippine government of bonds based on loans from the Philippine government to any Province or municipality in the islands, the government of the Philippine Islands shall, by the levy and collection of taxes on the municipality, its inhabitants and their property, or by other means, make adequate provision to meet the obligation of the bonds of such Province or municipality, and shall create a sinking fund sufficient to retire them and pay the interest thereon in accordance with the terms of issue.

SEC. 13. That general legislative powers in the Philippines, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a legislature which shall consist of two houses, one the senate and the other the house of representatives, and the two houses shall be designated "The Philippine Legislature": Provided, That, until the Philippine Legislature as herein provided shall have been organized, the existing Philippine Legislature shall have all legislative authority herein granted to the government of the Philippine Islands, except such as may now be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Philippine Commission, which is so continued until the organization of the legislature herein provided for the Philippines. When the Philippine Legislature shall have been organized, the exclusive legislative jurisdiction and authority exercised by the Philippine Commission shall thereafter be exercised by the Philippine Legislature.

SEC. 14. That the members of the senate of the Philippines, except as herein provided, shall be elected for terms of four years, as hereinafter provided, by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the senatorial districts except as hereinafter provided shall have the right to elect two senators. No person shall be an elective member of the senate of the Philippines who is not a qualified elector and over 25 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been a resident of the Philippines for at least two consecutive years and of the senatorial district from which chosen for a period of at least one year immediately prior to his election.

SEC. 15. That the members of the house of representatives shall, except as herein provided, be elected for terms of two years by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the representative districts hereinafter provided for shall have the right to elect one representative. No person shall be an elective member of the house of representatives who is not a qualified elector and over 21 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been a resident of the district from which elected for at least one year immediately prior to his election.

SEC. 16. That at the first election held pursuant to this act, the qualified electors shall be those having the qualifications of voters under the present law; thereafter and until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature herein provided for the qualifications of voters for senators and representatives in the Philippines and all officers elected by the people shall be as follows:

Every male person who is not a citizen or subject of a foreign power 21 years of age or over (except insane and feeble-minded persons and those convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction of an infamous offense since the 13th day of August, 1898), who shall have been a resident of the Philippines for one year and of the municipality in which he shall offer to vote for six months next preceding the day of voting, and who is comprised within one of the following classes:

(b) Those who own real property to the value of ₱500, or who annually pay ₱30 or more of the established taxes.

(c) Those who are able to read and write either Spanish, English, or a native language.

SEC. 17. That for the purposes of the first election hereafter to the Philippine Legislature, the Philippine Islands shall be divided into 12 senate districts, as follows:

First district: Batanes, Cagayan, Isabela, Ilocos Norte, and Ilocos Sur.

Second district: La Union, Pangasinan, and Zambales.

Third district: Tarlac, Nueva Ecija, Pampanga, and Bataan.

The representative districts shall be the 81 now provided by law, and 3 in the Mountain Province, 1 in Nueva Vizcaya, and 5 in the Department of Mindanao and Sulu.

The first election under the provisions of this act shall be held on the first Tuesday of June, 1915, and there shall be chosen at such election one senator from each senate district for a term of two years and one for four years. Of the two senators elect, the one receiving the larger number of votes shall have the four years' term, and in all cases where the vote is a tie the result shall be determined by lot. Thereafter one senator from each district shall be elected from each senate district for a term of four years. That at said first election each representative district shall elect one representative for a term of two years and bienially thereafter: Provided, That the Governor General of the Philippine Islands shall appoint, without the consent of the senate and without restriction as to residence, senators and representatives who will, in his opinion, best represent the senate district and those representative districts which may be included in the territory not now represented in the Philippine Assembly: Provided further, That thereafter elections shall be held only on such days and under such regulations as to ballots, voting, and qualifications of electors as may be prescribed by the Philippine Legislature, to which is hereby given authority, subject to the approval of the President, to redistrict the Philippine Islands and modify, amend, or repeal any provision of this section.

SEC. 18. That the terms of office of elective senators and representatives shall begin on the 16th of October following their election. In case of vacancy among the elective members of the senate or in the house of representatives, special elections may be held in the districts wherein such vacancy occurred under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, but senators or representatives elected in such cases shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred. The terms of senators and representatives appointed by the Governor General shall be the same as those of the elective senators and representatives.

SEC. 19. That the senate and house of representatives, respectively, shall be the sole judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their elective members, and each house may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel an elective member. Both houses shall convene at the capital on the 16th day of October next following the election and organize by the election of a speaker or a presiding officer, a clerk, and a sergeant at arms for each house, and such other officers and assistants as may be required. The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the 16th day of October or, if the 16th day of October be a legal holiday, then on the first day following which is not a legal holiday, in each year. The legislature may be called in special session at any time by the Governor General for general legislation, or for action on such specific subjects as he may designate. No special session shall continue longer than 30 days, exclusive of Sundays. The legislature is hereby given the power and authority to change the date of the commencement of its annual sessions.

The senators and representatives shall receive an annual compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the treasury of the Philippine Islands. The senators and representatives shall, in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house they shall not be questioned in any other place.

SEC. 20. That every bill and joint resolution which shall have passed both houses of the legislature shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor General. If he approve the same, he shall sign it; but if not he shall return it with his objections to that house in which it shall have originated, which shall enter the objections at large on its journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the members elected to that house shall agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of all the members elected to that house, it shall be sent to the Governor General, who shall transmit the same to the President of the United States. The vote of each house shall be by the yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against shall be entered on the journal. If the President of the United States approve the same, he shall sign it and it shall become a law. If he shall not approve same, he shall return it to the Governor General so stating, and it shall not become a law: Provided, That if any bill or joint resolution shall not be returned by the Governor General as herein provided within 20 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall become a law unless vetoed by the Governor General within 30 days after the adjournment of the legislature: Provided further, That the President of the United States shall approve or disapprove an act submitted to him under the provisions of this section within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval; and if not approved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved. The Governor General shall have the power to veto any particular item or items of an appropriation bill, but the veto shall not affect the item or items to which he does not object. The item or items objected to shall not take effect except in the manner heretofore provided in this section as to bills and joint resolutions returned to the legislature without his approval.

All laws enacted by the Philippine Legislature shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority to annul the same. If at the termination of any fiscal year the appropriations necessary for the support of government for the ensuing fiscal year shall not have been made, the several sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for the objects and purposes therein specified, so far as the same may be done, shall be deemed to be reappropriated for the several objects and purposes specified in said last appropriation bill; and until the legislature shall act in such behalf the treasurer shall, when so directed by the Governor General, make the payments necessary for the purposes aforesaid.

SEC. 21. That the qualified electors of the Philippine Islands shall, on the first Tuesday in June, 1915, and at the general elections thereafter provided for the election of senators and representatives to the Philippine Legislature, elect two Resident Commissioners to the United States, who shall hold their office for a term of four years beginning with the first Monday in the month of December following their election, and who shall be entitled to an official recognition as such by all departments upon presentation to the President of a certificate of election by the Governor General of said islands. Each of said Resident Commissioners shall, in addition to the salary and the sum in lieu of mileage now allowed by law, be allowed the same sum for stationery and for the pay of necessary clerk hire as is now allowed to the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and the franking privilege allowed by law to Members of Congress. No person shall be eligible to election as Resident Commissioner who is not a qualified elector of said islands and who does not owe allegiance to the United States and who is not more than 30 years of age and who does not read and write the English language. The present two Resident Commissioners shall hold office until the first Monday in December, 1915. The Governor General may remove a Resident Commissioner whenever the Philippine Legislature shall request such removal by a resolution adopted by two-thirds of the members of each house, and the legislature may fill any vacancy caused by such removal for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred. In case of vacancy in the position of Resident Commissioner, arising from any other cause than removal by the legislature, the Governor General may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Philippine Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy; but the Resident Commissioner thus elected shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred.

SEC. 22. That the supreme executive power shall be vested in an executive officer, whose official title shall be "The Governor General of the Philippine Islands." He shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and hold his office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor is chosen and qualified. The Governor General shall reside in the Philippine Islands during his official incumbency and maintain his office at the seat of government. He shall, unless otherwise herein provided, appoint, by and with the consent of the Philippine Senate, such officers as may now be appointed by the Governor General, or such as he is authorized by this act to appoint, or whom he may hereafter be authorized by law to appoint; but appointments made while the senate is not in session shall be effective either until disapproval or until the next adjournment of the senate. He shall have general supervision and control of all of the departments and bureaus of the government in the Philippine Islands as far as is not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and shall be commander in chief of all locally created armed forces and militia. He may grant pardons and reprieves and remit fines and forfeitures, and may veto any legislation enacted as herein provided. He shall submit within 10 days of the opening of each regular session of the Philippine Legislature a budget of receipts and expenditures, which shall be the basis of the annual appropriation bill. He shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint.

SEC. 23. That the Governor General shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws of the Philippine Islands and of the United States operative within the Philippine Islands, and whenever it becomes necessary he may call upon the commanders of the military and naval forces of the United States in the islands, or summon the posse comitatus, or call out the militia or other locally created armed forces, to prevent or suppress lawless violence, invasion, insurrection, or rebellion; and he may, in case of rebellion or invasion, or imminent danger thereof, when the public safety requires it, suspend the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus, or place the islands, or any part thereof, under martial law: Provided, That whenever the Governor General shall exercise the authority granted in this section he shall at once notify the President of the United States thereof, together with the attending facts and circumstances, and the President shall have power to modify or vacate the action of the Governor General. He shall annually and at such other times as he may be required make such official report of the transactions of the government of the Philippine Islands to the War Department, under the jurisdiction of which the islands continue, and his said annual report shall be transmitted to the Congress of the United States; and he shall perform such additional duties and functions as may in pursuance of law be delegated or assigned to him by the President.

SEC. 24. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, a vice governor of the Philippine Islands, who shall have all of the powers of the Governor General in the case of a vacancy or temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor General, or in case of his temporary absence; and the said vice governor shall be the head of the executive department, known as the department of public instruction, which shall include the bureau of education, the bureau of health, the bureau of science, and the bureau of non-Christian tribes.

Other bureaus now included in the department of public instruction shall, until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature, be included in the department of the interior.

The President may designate the head of an executive department of the Philippine government to act as Governor General in the case of a vacancy, the temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor General and of the vice governor, or their temporary absence, and the head of the department thus designated shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the Governor General during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

SEC. 25. That, except as provided otherwise in this act, the executive departments of the Philippine government shall continue as now authorized by law until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature. When the Philippine Legislature herein provided shall convene and organize, the Philippine Commission, as such, shall cease and determine and the members thereof, except the Governor General and heads of executive departments, shall vacate their offices as members of said commission. The Philippine Legislature, except as to the department of public instruction, may thereafter by appropriate legislation increase the number or abolish any of the executive departments, or make such changes in the names and duties thereof as it may see fit, and shall provide for the appointment and removal of the heads of the executive departments by the Governor General, and may provide that heads of executive departments, including the department of public instruction, shall have seats in either or both houses of the legislature, with the right of debating or voting or both: Provided, That all executive functions of the government must be directly under the Governor General or within one of the executive departments under the supervision and control of the Governor General. There is hereby established a bureau, to be known as the bureau of non-Christian tribes, which said bureau shall have general supervision over the public affairs of the inhabitants of the territory represented in the legislature by appointive senators and representatives.

SEC. 26. That there shall be appointed by the President an auditor, who shall examine, audit, and settle all accounts pertaining to the revenues and receipts from whatever source of the Philippine government and of the provincial and municipal governments of the Philippines, including trust funds and funds derived from bond issues; and audit, in accordance with law and administrative regulations, all expenditures of funds or property pertaining to or held in trust by the government or the Provinces or municipalities thereof. He shall perform a like duty with respect to all government branches.

He shall keep the general accounts of the government and preserve the vouchers pertaining thereto.

It shall be the duty of the auditor to bring to the attention of the proper administrative officer expenditures of funds or property which, in his opinion, are irregular, unnecessary, excessive, or extravagant.

There shall be a deputy auditor appointed in the same manner as the auditor. The deputy auditor shall sign such official papers as the auditor may designate and perform such other duties as the auditor may prescribe, and in case of the death, resignation, sickness, or other absence of the auditor from his office, from any cause, the deputy auditor shall have charge of such office. In case of the absence from duty, from any cause, of both the auditor and the deputy auditor, the Governor General may designate an assistant, who shall have charge of the office.

The administrative jurisdiction of the auditor over accounts, whether of funds or property, and all vouchers and records pertaining thereto, shall be exclusive. With the approval of the Governor General, he shall from time to time make and promulgate general or special rules and regulations not inconsistent with law covering the method of accounting for public funds and property, and funds and property held in trust by the government or any of its branches: Provided, That any officer accountable for public funds or property may require such additional reports or returns from his subordinates or others as he may deem necessary for his own information and protection.

The decisions of the auditor shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branches of the government, except that appeal therefrom may be taken by the party aggrieved or the head of the department concerned within one year, in the manner hereinafter prescribed. The auditor shall, except as hereinafter provided, have like authority as that conferred by law upon the several auditors of the United States and the Comptroller of the United States Treasury, and is authorized to communicate directly with any person having claims before him for settlement, or with any department, officer, or person having official relations with his office.

As soon after the close of each fiscal year as the accounts of said year may be examined and adjusted, the auditor shall submit to the Governor General and the Secretary of War an annual report of the fiscal concerns of the government, showing the receipts and disbursements of the various departments and bureaus of the government and of the various Provinces and municipalities, and make such other reports as may be required of him by the Governor General or the Secretary of War.

In the execution of their duties the auditor and the deputy auditor are authorized to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and to take evidence, and, in the pursuance of these provisions, may issue subpœnas and enforce the attendance of witnesses, as now provided by law.

The office of the auditor shall be under the general supervision of the Governor General and shall consist of the auditor and deputy auditor and such necessary assistants as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 27. That any person aggrieved by the action or decision of the auditor in the settlement of his account or claim may, within one year, take an appeal in writing to the Governor General, which appeal shall specifically set forth the particular action of the auditor to which exception is taken, with the reason and authorities relied on for reversing such decision.

If the Governor General shall confirm the action of the auditor, he shall so indorse the appeal and transmit it to the auditor, and the action shall thereupon be final and conclusive. Should the Governor General fail to sustain the action of the auditor, he shall forthwith transmit his grounds of disapproval to the Secretary of War, together with the appeal and the papers necessary to a proper understanding of the matter. SEC. 33. That all laws or parts of laws applicable to the Philippines not in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby continued in force and effect.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it had been my intention after the reading of the bill to make some remarks to-day, but in view of the fact that on account of the illness of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] it is not possible to take up the matter of amendments to-day, I shall content myself with having the bill become the unfinished business, which I understand it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair). The Chair understands that the hour of 2 o'clock having passed and the bill being under consideration and no other business intervening, it becomes the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. STONE rose.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I rose, I will say, to move an executive session.

Mr. JONES. I merely wanted to take three or four minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield the floor?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield the floor with the understanding that the bill holds its place as the unfinished business.

TRAVEL ON BELLIGERENT SHIPS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to take just a few minutes not specially to discuss the bill before the Senate but to refer to some matters that may be pertinent at the present time. When so many of our papers are demanding hasty and drastic action by our Government because of happenings to alleged Americans who insist upon traveling on belligerent ships and in dangerous territory regardless of the peace of their country and the welfare of the citizens at home, it is refreshing and encouraging to read such an editorial as that in the Washington Post of this morning. If all our papers would take this attitude and if the administration would also advise such a course the danger of foreign complications would soon disappear. The editorial is as follows:

HOW AMERICANS CAN HELP THEIR COUNTRY.

Americans traveling in European waters should keep off vessels belonging to belligerents. They take deadly risks when they travel under fighting flags, and they unnecessarily involve their country in disputes which may lead to war.

The United States Government will not give away the right of its citizens to travel on merchant vessels of any nationality in any waters. That right, however, should be exercised with discretion by citizens. Pending a time when submarine warfare will be conducted under established and accepted rules, American citizens should waive their right to travel under belligerent flags.

I take it, Mr. President, that the writer means that they should waive these rights not because of fear, not because of the weakness of our country, but in the interest of our country itself and the welfare of its citizens for our own protection.

The American who, in spite of warning, deliberately and defiantly asserts his right to travel in a vessel belonging to a nation at war when he can avoid doing so may be dragging his own country into war. This is not common sense or patriotism; it is mere braggadocio and egotism. The man who cares so little for his country has little reason to demand his country's protection.

There are so many obscure and undetermined questions surrounding submarine warfare that the United States Government is seriously handicapped in its efforts to extend protection to its citizens in the European war zone. Unquestionably a merchant vessel forfeits its noncombatant character when it arms itself and resists capture. Under the laws of war it has no right to attempt to escape. Yet merchant vessels go armed, and in many cases they have attempted to escape or ram the attacking submarine. The facts are usually hard to ascertain; the testimony is conflicting. If American lives are lost, there is a demand on the part of hot-headed individuals for drastic action whatever the state of facts may be. There is always the danger that the United States may be drawn into war without sufficient justification.

If this great Nation must draw the sword, it should be for reasons that conclusively demand such action. Only upon an assured state of facts overwhelmingly justifying and requiring war should the United States plunge into the vortex that engulfs Europe. Steadiness is needed; calmness in studying the truth, caution in verifying the facts. War is the last remedy of desperate evils, and this Nation is not in such extremities that it must shed the blood of its citizens in a doubtful cause. It has a right to expect its citizens to exercise great caution, to do their share in avoiding any cause of war.

The Nation's right to keep out of unnecessary war is surely paramount to the citizen's right to travel on belligerent vessels.

An American citizen who, in the face of the terrible cataclysm now engulfing half the civilized world, persists in traveling for pleasure or profit in the danger zone and in a belligerent ship shows that he is utterly lacking in patriotism and wholly regardless of the rights of humanity. He is entitled to no consideration whatever, and for this country to become embroiled in this trouble on his account would be a colossal crime against humanity.

The President has been highly commended for keeping us out of the war in Europe. I want to give him all the praise he deserves, but it has not been a question of keeping us out of this struggle. The people have not wanted to get into it. The question has been not to lead us into it, and I beseech the President now to be careful, to proceed slowly, to make no harsh or arbitrary demands, to keep in view the rights and interests of the 99,999,000 people at home rather than of the 1,000 reckless, inconsiderate, and unpatriotic citizens who insist on going abroad in belligerent ships, and that he do not lead us into a position that means trouble or humiliation.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator intend to imply that Consul McNeeley, returning on that ship, was unpatriotic and not a good American citizen?

Mr. JONES. I think it would have been better if Consul McNeeley had hunted up a neutral ship, as a representative of this Government, rather than go on a belligerent ship. That is what I think about Consul McNeeley. I regret, of course, his sad fate, but as the representative of the Government he should have been more careful even than a private citizen.

Mr. OWEN. May I venture to suggest to the Senator from Washington that where we have need to send our representatives under difficulties it would be better to send them on an American ship, under the protection of an American flag, safeguarded by the power of the United States?

Mr. JONES. The Senator is entirely right.

Mr. OWEN. We can furnish an armed vessel to send them abroad.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say one word, with the permission of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I am through.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is suggested by the inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. No one can lament more than I the misfortune that came to Consul McNeeley if it should unfortunately prove true that he was one of those who lost their lives in the sinking of the Persia, but we are not driven to the necessity suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma of sending our consular representatives on American ships. There was a neutral ship that would have safely carried Consul McNeeley to his post at Aden, and Consul McNeeley was advised by one of our consular representatives long in the service, Consul Skinner, who accompanied him from New York to England, that it would be better for him to continue his journey to Aden on a Dutch vessel that was about to sail. But for reasons, I suppose, satisfactory to himself, he disregarded that advice and sailed on a ship of a belligerent, taking those chances and hazards that will come to any neutral who finds himself on the soil of a belligerent nation, because the vessel of a belligerent is as much the property of a belligerent as is the country itself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] that the legislative session would be followed by an executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Philippine bill be temporarily laid aside; and therefore it will not lose its place as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], and also the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], to the fact that, outside of the British vessels that have been sunk by undersea boats, the neutral Scandinavian countries—Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, together with Holland—have altogether lost as many ships by that method as have the English Government through their ships. Now, what protection has a man traveling on the ships of those neutral countries, and what could you resort to except sending our consular representatives and telling our American people to travel in men of war?

The ship that carried the so-called peace party a short time ago to Christiania and the ship that carried it from there to Copenhagen were as liable to be torpedoed as any other ships. In fact, ships have been torpedoed within the 3-mile limit in Swedish waters by German submarines. The commerce of those neutral Scandinavian countries has been more injured and more damaged by the submarines that have destroyed their ships than from any other source.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think there is great force in what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] says with regard to stigmatizing our citizens who may have happened to be on boats which were torpedoed, because when a man goes upon one of those boats he does so probably because of some exigency, without braggadocio or intended risk, but because of need and with some conscious risk to himself. He does not do so for an unpatriotic purpose. He does so, perhaps, because of some fancied necessity. The Government of Great Britain during the Russo-Japanese War warned its citizens to avoid going upon belligerent ships in order to protect the British Empire from the embarrassment which might ensue from the torpedoing of those boats, and I think the Government of the United States should take some steps to advise its citizens in a formal way to keep them from endangering themselves and from endangering the peace of the United States.

The spirit and purpose of the editorial, I think, is absolutely right, and I agree to it; but I think as to the expression that they were unpatriotic it is a little improvident to attribute to them a bad motive, which is not necessary to the argument and probably unjust.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question, in view of the suggestion which he has just made. The Government of the United States not having advised its citizens to stay off these ships, and the rights of these people being well recognized, if a boat is unarmed or not seeking to escape is it to be considered as unpatriotic or in a sense reckless for them to assume to go upon it?

Mr. OWEN. I think not.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me not. A citizen of the United States has the right to assume that the international law which has so long been established will continue to be upheld by this Government, and respected by all Governments, and if it is not going to be maintained, if other conditions are going to arise which are to modify it, our citizens have a right to assume that the Government of the United States will notify them of that fact. The rights of these people upon one of these boats, if it was unarmed, is as fully recognized in international law as their rights would be upon a neutral vessel, and the laws of nations protect them just as effectively and efficiently as if they had been upon a neutral vessel. The thought I wished to convey, that in discussing the personal volition of the traveler we ought not to throw doubt upon his right under the law of nations to be there.

Mr. OWEN. I will agree with the Senator that all nations ought to protect their citizens under the international law, but unfortunately the ascertainment of the facts in individual cases and the determination of what is the international law under disputed facts is very difficult. In the case of the Persia it is alleged that she had a gun whose range was many miles, which could easily have sunk a submarine, and therefore she was in the attitude, if that statement be true, of being an armed vessel and is not within the safeguard of the international law as it is generally accepted. In the case of the Lusitania it was charged, and falsely charged, that she had cannon aboard which would endanger the life of a submarine, and in that case it appeared that the German Government had been misled by a false affidavit to the effect that she was armed with cannon. We can not tell to what jeopardy our citizens may be subjected, and therefore as a matter of common prudence, as a father would try to protect his own child, caution ought to be given to our citizens by our Government.

More than that, it has now become doubtful as to what international law is. Both the Governments of Great Britain and Germany have taken steps which would seem to argue a change of law because of modern exigency. That is the reason why I ventured to propose this morning a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States inviting the representatives of the nations of the world to an international conference in Washington City on the 1st of May next to ascertain what those laws are and ought to be and to take the necessary steps to bring about an international agreement by which we might safeguard the peace and the happiness of the world.

I respectfully call the attention of Senators to this resolution in the RECORD and request speedy action on it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, referring to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]—the destruction of neutral ships—I did not direct my remarks toward the loss of life on or the destruction or sinking of neutral ships. I think there would be a very great difference myself in the loss of life in the destruction of neutral ships and the loss of life in the destruction of belligerent ships.

So far as I am concerned, I do not agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that American citizens, in the absence of notice from their Government, have a right to assume that they will be perfectly safe on these belligerent ships. They know they are not safe. They are fully advised by what has been happening from day to day. They need no notice. While they have a right to do it under international law, I think our Government ought long ago to have advised American citizens to keep off these belligerent ships; but I think there is not an American citizen in this country who is not familiar with the dangers in which he is going and who does not know the dangers that he is subjecting this country to when he goes on these belligerent ships and into that territory. He does not need any notice, so far as that is concerned, from his Government to be acquainted with what he is likely to run into; and the citizen who, knowing these things, still goes on traveling on belligerent ships is not very considerate, to say the least, of the people at home or of his country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the only suggestion which I made was that if this ship was unarmed, a citizen had a right to assume that he was just as safe as if he were upon a neutral vessel. If he was to rely upon international law, he is protected in the one instance just as much as in the other. Whether the vessel is armed or unarmed is always a controverted question. If it were not armed, he would have the same protection that he would have upon a neutral vessel. My opinion that the Government is responsible for this disaster would not challenge that proposition.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply contend that, under the present condition of things, under the state of affairs in these foreign countries and seas, a citizen does not have a right to expect that when he goes on a belligerent ship he is perfectly safe. Everything has shown to the contrary. He knows very well that if he goes on a belligerent ship, and it is sunk, as has frequently been the case, he not only loses his own life but embroils our country in trouble and our people in trouble; and if he is patriotic, if he is considerate of his country and people, he will not lay himself liable to that trouble and his country to this danger.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have in mind the case of a prominent citizen of my own city who lost his life on the Lusitania. He was warned by public notice that was given not to take passage on the boat, and in addition to that he was privately and personally warned not to travel in that way. He disregarded these warnings, made light of them, and as a consequence lost his life. The officers of the Government were perfectly aware that the ship was loaded to the guards with arms and munitions of war for some of the belligerent nations. The passengers were permitted to travel upon the boat with that knowledge existing upon the part of the Government. Not only were the passengers themselves at fault, but the Government, in permitting passengers to take passage upon a ship that was practically carrying death and destruction to the subjects of one of the contending nations, is itself to some extent morally responsible for the deaths of the people who lost their lives. By that means the Government placed itself in a false position which must have embarrassed the administration in dealing with the question. We did not come to the question in dealing with a foreign nation with clean hands; we contributed to the disaster by permitting the passage of our own people on a ship loaded in that way. As a consequence our protest against this brutal destruction of our people lost much of its force.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator makes a very grave assertion when he charges that, because it failed to prevent our citizens from taking passage upon a ship sailing under the flag of a belligerent, the Government of the United States is responsible for the death of those who were cruelly sent to the ocean's bottom. I desire to ask him under what authority of law the Government officers could have prohibited American citizens from taking passage on any ship they saw fit to select?

Mr. WORKS. It would only have been necessary, Mr. President, for the Government to notify them that they should not take passage on a ship of that kind. It would not have been necessary to resort to force.

Mr. REED. If the Government had served such a notice as that, it would have been exceeding its authority. It is charged with no legal duty so to do, and it is charged with no greater moral duty than is the Senator himself, who owes no duty other than that resting upon all citizens of the Republic.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Would it not also have constituted an implied assertion by the United States of a doubt as to the right of a citizen to travel upon an unarmed belligerent vessel?

Mr. REED. Unquestionably.

Mr. ROBINSON. For the United States to issue a warning protesting against its citizens taking passage upon an unarmed belligerent vessel might constitute an assertion of the doctrine that the right to so travel did not exist.

In this connection I merely want to suggest that we ought to consider the thought whether the United States wants now to commit itself to the doctrine that by warning its citizens not to travel upon unarmed belligerent vessels that right is of doubt.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the proposition that a citizen ought to be very cautious how and when and where he travels abroad, but I do not want at this time to commit this Government to the proposition that under international law we have not the right so to travel if we choose to do so.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will yield a moment, I should like to address a question to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

No one will dispute that under treaty regulations American citizens have an absolute right to reside in and to journey through Mexico, and yet during the past year the attitude of our Government has been one of caution to American citizens to minimize the hazards and perils of residence in that country and to quit it. Does the Senator from Arkansas think that our Government has exposed itself to any imputation of the want of power or willingness to sustain the rights of our citizens in giving that caution?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not; but I do think that others have criticized the Government for the very action to which the Senator from New York refers.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is no unusual thing for a great and powerful Government to caution its citizens in time of great war and danger to avoid the zone of hazard and peril, and, as was stated a little while since by the Senator from Oklahoma, Great Britain herself, under similar circumstances, not many years ago, without recognizing any doubt as to the rights of her subjects to travel on the ships of belligerents, nevertheless advised her subjects as a wise, as a prudent, and as a discreet measure to avoid those ships when they could travel on the ships of neutral nations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with all that the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] has stated in this connection; but I also repeat my suggestion that for this Government to warn its citizens against traveling abroad on unarmed belligerent vessels might be construed in this time, when questions of international law have arisen as to the existence of the right, as an implied admission by the Government that it had doubts as to the existence of that right. That is the only suggestion I made.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator's apprehension, I suppose, would be removed if in any such warnings conveyed to our citizens the Government distinctly disavowed any intent of recognizing the right of any belligerent to place restrictions upon the rights of our citizens with respect to travel.

Mr. ROBINSON. That might be true; but I make the further suggestion that if the Government should give such warning and then a vessel bearing American citizens should be destroyed, whatever the acts might be, however much they might be in violation of the principles of international law, it might still be urged by the offending nation, if I may term it such, that the mere fact that this Government had issued a warning to its citizens would constitute something in the nature of an estoppel against the Government to complain of the alleged wrong.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it may be conceded as a mere question of law that an American citizen has a perfect right to travel upon one of these ships, loaded, as I have stated, and owned by the subjects of a belligerent nation; but certainly there is a moral responsibility resting not only upon the Government but upon every American citizen to do everything that is possible to be done properly to avoid conflict with the nations that are now at war.

I go further back than that. I have from the very beginning been opposed to the shipment of munitions of war and arms to any of these belligerent nations. I particularly objected to it after Great Britain had practically blockaded the ports of Germany so that we could not ship our own goods to that country, one of the belligerents. If we had said to Great Britain at that time, "If you prevent the shipment of our goods to Germany, we will furnish you no more munitions of war," we might have brought England to terms; but, aside from that, Mr. President, we have practically made ourselves parties to the war by supplying munitions of war and money to one side of the controversy, while neither is being furnished to the other side. We are not neutral; we are hypocritical in claiming that we are neutral.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. The Senator from California states that we have made ourselves parties to the war by furnishing money and munitions to one side. I want to ask the Senator if he does not know that one of the first loans floated in this country was a loan of $25,000,000 to Germany, and if he does not know that it was floated without a protest either by himself or by those who think and talk as he does?

Mr. WORKS. Whether that be so or not, Mr. President, it does not alter the situation in the least.

Mr. REED. But the Senator charges that we are not neutral. Now, I want to ask him another question: I ask if he does not know that Germany procured arms in this country as long as she could possibly get them from our shores to her own?

Mr. WORKS. That may be, Mr. President, but still it does not alter the situation.

Mr. REED. Now, if it is true that this country has been as free and open to Germany as it has been to all other countries, and that our Government has in no way distinguished between them, that the market is here free for them to enter if they can enter it, so that the treatment has been exactly the same for all peoples, how can the Senator say that this Government has taken an unneutral position?

Mr. WORKS. The Senator says so simply because it has been impossible to furnish munitions of war to the German nation, whether our markets were open to them or not. It is impossible that they could have been supplied to that nation, and therefore we have been supplying munitions of war to one nation when we could not furnish them to the other.

Mr. REED. But that impossibility, the Senator will agree, for he is a fair man, is not because of anything our Government has done; it is not because of anything our people have done; but it is simply because one nation or one side has been able to overcome the other side upon the sea; the highway over which the goods are to pass has been taken possession of by the enemies of the central powers; and it is because the highway is blocked that they are not able to carry to their country the equipment they are perfectly free to acquire in the United States. The fact that England has closed the seas to Austria and Germany is an act of war by England. It is not an unneutral act on the part of the United States. The inability of the central powers to avail themselves of the benefits of our free markets is a mere exigency of the conflict between the central powers and the allies.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, Mr. President, I have no doubt in the world but that the citizens of this country who have been supplying arms to England would very gladly have furnished them to Germany for money, because they are selling them for that purpose and are growing rich upon the trade. That is not the question. It is a moral responsibility that is resting not only upon the people who are supplying these arms but, as I think, upon the Government permitting it to be done. I am not insisting that this should not be done simply because we are unable to furnish arms to Germany. My position is that we should not furnish them to any of these belligerents at any time.

Mr. REED. May I interrupt the Senator further?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. To ask if the Senator believes we should not furnish arms because he believes it is in conflict with international law?

Mr. WORKS. I have not said so, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. And the Senator does not think so, of course?

Mr. WORKS. No.

Mr. REED. Then is the Senator's objection to the furnishing of arms based upon the idea that by furnishing arms to one side or the other or to both we enable them to kill each other? Is that the moral objection?

Mr. WORKS. That is one of the moral objections.

Mr. REED. Is not that the real objection?

Mr. WORKS. That is the principal one, certainly.

Mr. REED. If that be the objection, does it not follow that when we furnish them anything enabling them to keep armies in the field we are in the same way contributing to the power of one side or the other to kill its antagonists?

Mr. WORKS. Precisely, Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Then, does it not follow——

Mr. WORKS. Just wait one moment—and in the bill that I introduced here in the Senate I provided that not only munitions of war should not be sent, but that clothing and food for the armies should not be supplied.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WORKS. In other words, I object to the furnishing of any of the supplies that have been furnished by this Government or its people that are prolonging the war.

Mr. REED. The Senator believes that we should not sell cannon or rifles or ammunition to a nation engaged in war. He likewise believes that we should not sell to them food or clothing or shoes or horses or mules or automobiles or anything used upon the field of battle?

Mr. WORKS. That is my position, precisely.

Mr. REED. Then, the Senator must certainly go one step further. No army can be kept in the field, however well fed or well clothed from abroad, unless the people at home are also fed and clothed. So I think that the Senator would, by parity of reasoning, reach the conclusion that no goods of any character should be sent to a belligerent power.

Mr. WORKS. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. That must be true, and if true it follows that our entire foreign trade should be wiped out at once; that this country should suffer all of the disasters of a war, for which it was in no way responsible, except the loss of the lives of its citizens. Enforce such a doctrine and the price of every horse and mule in America will fall to about 50 per cent of its value; likewise cattle and hogs will go to about 50 per cent of their value. All the products of our farms and mines and factories will go to about 50 per cent of their value, and this country will be engulfed in a financial and industrial catastrophe such as the world has never seen. All this the Senator would have our country suffer on account of a war that we prayed would never be begun, which we pray may be speedily ended, and for which we are in no manner responsible.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the difference between the Senator from Missouri and myself is that I value human life above property while apparently he does not.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, the Senator is wrong. This war, as any sensible man knows, is going on until one of two things happen: Either one side or the other will be conquered or they will continue to fight until exhaustion ends the conflict. It is indisputable that the sooner one of these results is brought about the less there will be of human suffering and the less there will be of death and the less there will be of destruction. The sale of arms has a tendency to shorten the conflict.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was impressed with the statement made by the Senator from Missouri as to the industrial conditions which would obtain in this country if it were not for the war.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator misunderstood me. I said that if we were to adopt the philosophy of stopping the shipment of everything to Europe the result indicated would follow.

Mr. BORAH. Well, what does the Senator think would be the effect if we should suddenly stop the sale of those things which have been called for as extras by reason of the war—munitions, and so forth?

Mr. REED. The result?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; what would be the industrial effect upon this country?

Mr. REED. It would to that extent, of course, injure our financial condition. The country would probably still be able to go on and prosper and do business, but not to the same extent.

I want to say to the Senator, before he takes his seat, that, notwithstanding all the benefits which have come to this country from the war, I very much doubt whether we are in as good condition to-day as we would have been if trade had pursued an uninterrupted course and the world had remained at peace. Let me illustrate: Our exports to Germany in one period of 12 months fell off nearly $300,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. But our trade, while it fell off with Germany, has been doubled or quadrupled with other countries, to the extent, I think, of one billion one hundred and forty million.

Mr. REED. I do not agree to the Senator's figures; surely they are inaccurate if applied alone to munitions of war. There has, of course, been an increase, but there have been fallings off, of course, with other countries. I do not think this war is by any means a real financial blessing to us.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will state his point of order.

Mr. STONE. If the prolongation of this debate is going to lead to the discussion of all sorts of questions, I think we had better close it; for, as I understand, there is nothing before the Senate. I do not wish to take, and perhaps I can not take, the Senator from California off the floor, but I give notice that when he is through I shall move an executive session. I suppose I can take him off the floor, as there is nothing before the Senate, but I have no wish to do that.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I had no intention of taking up so much of the time of the Senate, and the Senator from Missouri will bear witness that most of the time has been taken up by other Senators. I only have a few more words to say.

The trouble, Mr. President, about our responsibility for prolonging this war is that so many of the people of this country place it upon the basis of dollars and cents. It is a terrible responsibility that we have taken upon ourselves when we furnish the material and the means to take the lives of the citizens of a friendly nation; and, for my part, I do not believe we can justify ourselves by saying that it is necessary in order to keep up the trade of this country with foreign nations. I hope the time may soon come when either the administration itself or Congress will reach the point where they will put an end to this traffic, which, I think, should have been prevented long since.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I understand the position of the Senator from California, it is that it is morally wrong for the citizens of this country to sell munitions of war to any Government which is engaged in war with any other country. Am I right about that?

Mr. WORKS. That is my position.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If that be true, then I suppose the Senator would naturally take the position that it is wrong for the people of any country to sell munitions of war to any Government engaged in war with another country?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, what would the Senator say of a condition of this sort? Suppose there should happen to be one nation that had devoted itself to building up a great military establishment; it had an enormous army; it had factories by means of which it could manufacture all the munitions of war necessary to keep its great army in the field, and there happened to be another nation which was devoted to the arts of peace, which had taken the position that it was unwise to maintain a great standing army or to accumulate great quantities of arms and ammunition, and in that situation the great warlike nation, with its immense army and immense stores of munitions, should attack the peaceable nation. The result of that would be that the peaceable nation would be utterly crushed without any opportunity of obtaining from other countries of the world the means to defend itself against what might be a very wicked attack upon it. Would the Senator think that that situation would be desirable?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the case stated by the Senator from Utah is a purely imaginary one and does not exist in fact. What he says might be a very strong reason why this Government should take one side or the other of the controversy and become an ally of one of the nations or the other under the circumstances stated; but we are not doing that. We are professing to be neutral, and when we make that profession and, even under the circumstances stated by the Senator, supply munitions of war to one of the nations as against the other we are no longer neutral, but we become an ally of that nation. That is precisely what has come about.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator another question. The Senator says that a condition of that kind is unlikely to arise.

Mr. WORKS. I said it had not arisen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Senator to say that it was purely imaginary, which would indicate that he thought it was unlikely to arise.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, no.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did I misunderstand the Senator?

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Utah misunderstood me. I am speaking about present conditions; I do not know what may happen in the future.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Take for example China. China, as the Senator knows, is a peaceful country, with no large standing army or supply of munitions on hand. There are other countries that have pretty good-sized armies and supplies of munitions of war, and there has been more or less talk about attacks upon China. Suppose that they should materialize and that China should be attacked. Would the Senator say that it would be, as a matter of morals, a desirable situation for those people not to be able to secure arms somewhere else to defend themselves against an aggressive war of that sort?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly it would not be desirable, but that is not the question. The question is whether we are in fact neutral, as we are claiming to be; whether we have not taken such sides in this controversy as to make us practically a party to one side as against the other.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the single point of neutrality, the test of neutrality is whether the action of the neutral changes the conditions created by the war. Our markets are open to all the world to buy. We have taken no action to prevent any belligerent or anyone else from buying in our markets, and we are at peace with all the world. A condition has been created by this war, and by the war alone, which prevents one or more of the belligerents from buying in this market. Now, if we undertake to reverse a condition created by the war we at once pro tanto enter into the war and endeavor to restore a condition existing before the war, and that is an act of unneutrality.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator from Massachusetts state that in his opinion it is the duty of our Government to sell munitions to any belligerent at this time?

Mr. LODGE. I think our markets should be open to any belligerent or to any neutral.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator think that we are under any obligation to sell our munitions to any belligerent?

Mr. LODGE. Obligation! It is not a question of obligation at all. The law is perfectly well settled on that point, as the Senator knows. The citizens or subjects of a neutral country are at liberty to ship contraband to belligerents at their own risk, but the Government is not responsible, of course, for what becomes of that contraband.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator recognizes that it is entirely optional with us whether or not we sell munitions?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, Mr. President, any Government can put an embargo on anything it chooses to put an embargo upon. There is no question about the power. I am discussing the law, not the power.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Then, does the Senator think that, in the exercise of a sovereign and conceded right, if the Government placed an embargo that act would constitute an act of unneutrality?

Mr. LODGE. I think, Mr. President, if this Government placed an embargo now on the export of munitions of war it would be guilty of a grossly unneutral act, because it would by so doing change a condition created by the war, and by changing a condition created by the war, that is created by one belligerent, it would make itself to that extent the ally of the other belligerent.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Evidently in time of war such as is now disturbing the peace of the world almost any act of a neutral power would be regarded by some as an act of partiality toward one of the belligerents; but, in my judgment, this Government if it saw fit, if it deemed it best for the welfare of the American Nation, if it regarded it as the best security of peace with all the nations, could place an embargo against the shipment of any munitions to any belligerent without exposing itself to the imputation of an unneutral act.

Mr. LODGE. I am not questioning the power; I am making the point—and I do not think it can be successfully controverted—that if a neutral deliberately takes such action as to change a condition created by the war, and created by one belligerent against another, to that extent it becomes the ally of the belligerent that it benefits. Here it so happens that the conditions of the war have given the control of the sea to what are usually called "the allies." Now, if we undertake to undo that condition we, of course, at once to that extent make ourselves the ally of Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he thinks that Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and Holland were guilty of unneutral acts when they placed an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition after the war began?

Mr. LODGE. No; for the simple reason——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, has it come to this, that America is the only great nation of the world forbidden, according to the Senator's theory, from exercising the sovereign right of placing an embargo?

Mr. LODGE. Why, not the least in the world; the countries referred to did not change the conditions by their actions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But would the United States change the conditions?

Mr. LODGE. It would change the conditions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is wrong.

Mr. LODGE. The day it puts an embargo on, all the world knows that would be worth more to Germany than a million men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And before Sweden placed an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition those arms and ammunition, without passing over the sea, could get into Germany. The same was true of Holland. The same was true of Denmark, and before Italy entered into the war it was true of Italy. The placing of the embargo deprived Germany of that safe method of securing arms and ammunition and other contraband of war; and yet no one was heard to claim that those countries had been guilty of an act of unneutrality.

Mr. LODGE. Why, Mr. President, the thing is so obvious. Their embargo applied equally to all. Ours would apply only to one, in practice.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Their embargo applied to Germany especially, because it was with Germany that they could carry on their trade on land. They could not carry on a trade on land with Great Britain.

Mr. LODGE. No; but they could carry on a trade at sea with Great Britain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Germany was the great and only beneficiary, practically. Everybody knows that Germany was deprived of an enormous advantage when Great Britain forced those neutral countries of Europe to put on that embargo or lose the food which they needed and which Great Britain could keep from them; and yet no one claimed that those countries were committing an unneutral act.

The position of the Senator is virtually this: That the United States stands to-day as the only neutral nation in the world prohibited, according to his theory, from exercising this sovereign right of government—exercising it for its own benefit, exercising it for a moral reason, exercising it because the failure to exercise it makes it a participant in the war.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the case is so clear that it seems to me from either point of view hardly worth discussing. The countries named by the Senator by their embargo cut off the export of arms and munitions of war from their countries to all the belligerents.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One moment, Mr. President. I want to finish one sentence, and then I will yield. Their embargo applied equally to all. Our embargo, owing to conditions created by the war, would apply only to one.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he considers the fact that the condition that he thinks we ought not to change was brought about by the action of the Government to which we are now supplying arms?

Mr. LODGE. Why, of course it was not, Mr. President. It was brought about by the course of the war, in which one side got control of the sea. We should be doing just as unneutral a thing as if it were in our power to shut down the arms factories of Liege, of which Germany got possession at the beginning of the war, and which she is now running in her own interest. If we tried to shut down those factories, if we had the power to do it, it would be an unneutral act.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. O'GORMAN. If the belligerent that is deriving the greatest benefit from our present attitude with regard to the exportation of arms were guilty of positive offenses against our own rights as a neutral nation, does the Sentor think that placing an embargo because of that reason——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator state the reason again?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Suppose the belligerent that is the chief beneficiary of our present policy with respect to the exportation of ammunition were to disregard our rights as a neutral nation, does the Senator think we would be justified in placing an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition as a retaliatory measure because of such conduct on the part of a belligerent nation disregarding and offensively violating our rights as a neutral?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, we should have a right to impose a retaliatory embargo if we wanted to do so.

Mr. O'GORMAN. If we did it for that reason, could it then be said that we were guilty of an unneutral act?

Mr. LODGE. A retaliatory embargo? That opens a great many questions, as to whether there is ground for retaliation or whether that is the best way of dealing with it. I think myself it might very well be an unneutral act.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, of course this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. I have not objected. I thought it was very well to let it run a little while, by way of feeling out and getting some index to the sentiment of the Senate; but if we are going to enter upon the particular question now raised between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts, I shall object to the debate proceeding further.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I am entirely through. I do not desire to say anything more. If the Senator will allow me to yield to the Senator from New Mexico, I will sit down.

Mr. FALL. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who is a historian, if it is not a historical fact that the policy of the United States with reference to the sale and shipment of arms to all countries was first announced by Thomas Jefferson, Secretary of State, in answer to a protest of Great Britain that this country was furnishing arms to France?

Mr. LODGE. That is my recollection.

Mr. FALL. I think that is a historical fact.

Mr. STONE. The Senators agree upon the historical fact.

Mr. FALL. I think so.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 5, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for the valor and wisdom of our fathers, which gave to us civil, political, and religious liberty in a government of the people, by the people, for the people, that the peoples of the Western Hemisphere have followed their illustrious example. We thank Thee for the Pan American Scientific Congress, now convened in our National Capital. May its light go out to all the world and illumine the minds of the people and stimulate them to seek the hidden truths which lie around us. "What we know is nothing; what we don't know is immense." And we most fervently pray that the coming together of these representative men may strengthen and solidify the great Republics which they represent in the bonds of fraternity and brotherly love, "Each for all and all for each," under the spiritual leadership of the world's great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—H. R. 6236.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6236) granting an increase of pension to Buford P. Moss, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is that a private bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is.

The SPEAKER. All the gentleman has to do is to change the reference and put it in the box. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] was to have an hour this morning.

The SPEAKER. Yes. Under a special order made yesterday the gentleman from Washington is recognized for one hour, to speak on the state of the Union.

OUR BATTLE-FIELD PROSPERITY.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to give notice to those who have the business of the House in charge that I shall probably not occupy the entire hour. Yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in announcing my subject gave me rather a broad one. As a matter of fact, I intend to talk to-day for a little while upon the present prosperity that this country is enjoying, and in order that I may get through and not seem to be discourteous I make the request now that I be not interrupted until I have finished what I have prepared.

Every time a new gun is sold to the warring nations of Europe, or a new shell is manufactured for them, or they give another order for an additional ton of powder, the Secretary of Commerce, the official, suave, prosperity "thimblerigger" of the administration, issues a cheerful official bulletin that prosperity at last is coming. [Laughter on the Republican side.] He has issued these promising bulletins with feverish frequency ever since the Underwood law went upon the statute books. Almost daily he seeks to dispel the "psychological" gloom by declaring that business is looking up. It may be so, for business has been flat on its back, gazing at the stars, ever since this administration went into power, wondering if it will ever be able to stand erect again. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If business is improving it must have been bad. If it is looking up now it must have been looking down.

PROSPERITY, SPASMODIC AND TEMPORARY.

What are the true conditions to-day? Does prosperity prevail? When I was on the Pacific coast I was told that things were very prosperous in the East and Middle West. When I was in the Middle West I was told that business was very prosperous on the two coasts. When I reached the Atlantic I was told that business was very prosperous in the Middle West and on the Pacific. The fact about it is that the country to-day is blessed only with a local, spotted, temporary, spasmodic prosperity.

The Democratic Party is in ecstasies over it, poor as it is, transient as it is, coined from the greatest of calamities as it is, for it is the only prosperity that this Nation ever saw under a Democratic administration. Perhaps the Democrats are not to blame for claiming it, for they never had an opportunity to claim any kind of prosperity before. Our present condition, coming from an unexpected and tragic source, at a time when the Democratic Party, in despair and gloom, was facing overwhelming defeat, has been a piece of political good fortune that has upset the Democratic mental equilibrium. That party to-day is completely befuddled. They think that the people can be deceived as to the facts. The Democratic Party to-day reminds me of an incident of Klondike days.

A day laborer went to that region of promise and disappointment. He worked with a shovel. In the meantime he staked a claim that was considered worthless. Like the Democratic Party, the sweet smile of accidental fortune came upon him. His claim yielded half a million dollars in gold. He secured this sum and, unannounced to friends or family, brought it to Seattle. He found his wife working at the washboard to support herself and three grown daughters. He determined that life's luxuries should no longer be denied them. He bought new dresses of latest fashion for mother and the girls and a white parasol for each, and thus arrayed, although it was midwinter, he ordered a cab, and the family enjoyed a drive about the city—an indulgence which they had never before enjoyed or dreamed of. As they drove about the city the old gentleman sat on the driver's seat and pompously smoked two cigars at the same time. This was the first step of the delusion brought by his good fortune. Soon he became convinced that he had secured his fortune solely because of his great mental capacity and ability, and he was offended that his financial genius was not generally recognized.

The Democratic Party is passing through the first stage into the second. It is now confident that this temporary prosperity of misfortune is due solely to its wonderful achievements. The rest of the world knows it is entirely due to accident.

The war in Europe has compelled our competitors to become our best customers. It has compelled them to buy from us. It has compelled them to stop selling to us. The price of their existence has compelled them to do this. Our trade has increased but little with any nation not at war. It has decreased with most of them. Our export trade has increased enormously, but all that increase is measured exactly by the increased sales caused by the war.

We are selling to-day products to Europe made necessary on account of the war to the amount of $300,000,000 a month—$3,600,000,000 a year. Every forty days an amount sufficient to construct the Panama Canal. No such financial fortune ever before came to any nation of earth. It is brought by the accident and horrors of war. This is the basis—and the only basis—for all our prosperity, such as it is to-day. And this prosperity to-day exists, not because of the action of the Democratic administration but in spite of all its blundering and stupidity.

For the first time in the world's history we have heard the argument advanced that for us to be at peace and sell to our competitors vastly more than we ever sold them before, at higher prices than ever before, is a great industrial calamity to this country that only the genius of a Democratic administration could overcome.

Before this war in Europe broke out we had experienced nine months of the present free-trade tariff law and during that time there was a greater falling off of revenues, there were more business failures, more mills and factories closed, more men were thrown out of employment, more beggars and paupers were made, more idleness and want brought upon us, more demands were made upon charity to care for the cold and hungry than during any other nine months in our Nation's history, not excepting the days of starvation and rags under Grover Cleveland. [Applause on the Republican side.] The war in Europe has been a calamity to the race beyond human conception, but it has been the industrial salvation of this country. Our prosperity is entirely created by that indescribable tragedy. But for the war this Nation would to-day be suffering industrially beyond imagination and description. We would be in the midst of panic and poverty that would make the days of '93 to '97 look like greatest prosperity by comparison.

CERTAIN INDUSTRIAL INVASION.

When the millions of men now in the armies of Europe turn from pursuits of war to the pursuits of peace, when they leave the battle fields and return to the workshop and the mill and the mine and the farm, what, then, will be the effect upon our industrial condition?

When these millions, burdened with debt and struggling with poverty, when they cease to buy from us munitions of war, when they cease to buy from us the things that they eat and wear, when they begin to produce and produce more cheaply than ever before, when this mighty host becomes competitors instead of customers, then we will witness an industrial invasion of this country that will surpass all former industrial wars as the present war in Europe surpasses all others of history.

To meet this contest we are utterly helpless. For this contest we are making no preparation whatever. Against this invasion we have torn down every defense, destroyed every weapon and disarmed and discouraged every soldier.

We should prepare for war. We should be ready always to repel any invader. Upon this question all agree. The only reason that there is any difference of opinion in this country to-day upon the question of "preparedness" is because there is a difference of opinion as to the danger of invasion. But if we knew that we would be invaded, that about it there could be no question of doubt, then certainly no American but what would be in favor of most complete preparedness without a single day of delay. As certain as civilization endures, just that certain will we suffer an industrial invasion as soon as the struggle in Europe ends. Upon this question there can be no difference of opinion. What will be done in that day when our land is flooded with the products of cheap labor, when our mills and factories must close, and our land again becomes filled with the idle, hungry unemployed? If our present administration continues to conduct the affairs of the Government the suffering and poor in that day will again be fed with classic phrases upon "psychological" prosperity, they will be clothed with scholarly essays upon the beauties of free trade and the glories of new freedom and warmed with smug and smirking advice upon efficiency.

If our present tariff law remains upon our statute books a period of depression will begin in this country within 24 hours after peace is declared, and within 12 months after that time we will be in a period of panic and poverty never before equaled in our national experience. Then will the people of this country realize, what they now know, that our prosperity to-day is due to the war in Europe. To take no step to avert this certain disaster is treason against the American people.

If the party in power does not know this, then the price of their stupidity will be well-merited political oblivion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Let us examine in detail this prosperity so exultingly proclaimed by the Democratic Party. Upon what foundation does it rest? What is its inspiration and its cause? Let us look upon the peaceful picture of prosperity this side of the ocean and then turn to the bloody picture upon the other and see if there is any relation between the two.

PROSPERITY OF THE FARMER.

They point to the prosperity of the farmer. True, we have the largest wheat crop in our history, and we have sold more to Europe than ever before. Our sale of wheat to Europe during the first year of the war compared with the first year of the present tariff law in time of peace increased from $103,595,000 worth to $316,262,000 worth, a gain of 205 per cent. Our wheat is used to feed the armies of Europe. But what was wheat worth in this country at the beginning of the war? To show the effect that the war has had upon our prosperity, let us take for comparison the year from September, 1913, to September, 1914, the year of peace and the first year of the Underwood law, and compare it with September, 1914, to September, 1915, the year of war and the second year of the Underwood law.

During the year of peace we sold in breadstuffs to Europe $181,484,000 worth. In the year of war we sold $567,607,000, a gain of 213 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe horses to the value of $3,177,000. In the year of war we sold them horses to the value of $82,276,000, a gain of 2,490 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe mules to the value of $622,000. In the year of war we sold them mules to the value of $18,041,000, a gain of 2,795 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe hay to the value of $790,000. During the year of war we sold to Europe hay to the value of $2,263,000, a gain of 233 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe meats and dairy products to the value of $138,736,000. During the year of war we sold them meats and dairy products to the value of $243,098,000, a gain of 75 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe sugar to the value of $4,341,000. During the year of war we sold to Europe sugar to the value of $36,816,000, a gain of 748 per cent.

Why should not the farmer of this country be prosperous when he is feeding the greatest armies that this world has ever seen? Does the Democratic Party think that there is a farmer in all America that can be deceived as to the reason of their present prosperity or that has forgotten the conditions that prevailed in this country the year before the war and the first year of the Underwood law upon our statute books?

MINES.

But we are told that the mines of this country are enjoying great prosperity also. It is true that we are selling vast quantities of the products of our mines to Europe. They are needed for war purposes.

Taking the same dates heretofore used—that is, from September, 1913, to September, 1914, the year of peace, and September, 1914, to September, 1915, the year of war—and official statistics tell a convincing story.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe $12,870,000 worth of goods manufactured from aluminum, brass, lead, and zinc. In the year of war we sold of the same products to Europe of the value of $66,730,000, a gain of 419 per cent. Zinc is necessary in the manufacture of shells. In this one item alone our sales increased from $785,000 in the year of peace to $26,323,000 in the year of war, a gain of 3,253 per cent. Is it necessary to stop to explain the reason for the prosperity of our mines?

MANUFACTURES.

They tell us, too, that our woolen mills are running, while many of them were closed down the first year of this Democratic tariff law. Is there an explanation?

In the year of peace we sold to Europe woolen goods to the value of $4,753,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe woolen goods to the value of $32,057,000, a gain of 574 per cent. Is any further demonstration needed as to the cause of the present condition of the woolen mills?

The leather industry, they inform us, is no longer depressed as it was before the war. Let statistics give the answer.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe men's shoes to the value of $9,603,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe men's shoes to the value of $22,669,000, a gain of 267 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe goods manufactured from leather to the value of $43,390,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe goods manufactured from leather to the value of $90,804,000, a gain of 109 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe harness and saddlery to the value of $793,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe harness and saddlery to the value of $18,434,000, a gain of 2,223 per cent.

Is there anything mysterious about the increased activity in the leather industry?

In the steel industry there has been great activity also. Steel is the one thing that enters more directly into the manufacture of munitions of war than perhaps any other. Look at the figures in regard to this industry.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe steel bars and billets to the value of $7,590,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe of the same products to the value of $21,743,000, a gain of 186 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe barbed and other wire to the value of $7,472,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe barbed and other wire to the value of $18,882,000, a gain of 153 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe firearms to the value of $3,171,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe firearms to the value of $11,591,000, a gain of 265 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe explosives to the value of $6,244,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe explosives to the value of $71,806,000, a gain of 1,050 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe medical appliances to the value of $1,571,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe medical appliances to the value of $5,218,000, a gain of 231 per cent.

In the year of peace we sold to Europe machine tools to the value of $12,536,000. In the year of war we sold to Europe machine tools to the value of $34,550,000, a gain of 175 per cent.

What of our automobile industry? The first year of the Underwood law drove many automobile establishments into bankruptcy. To-day they are running again. Let the figures answer why.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe automobiles and automobile tires to the value of $34,000,000. During the year of war we sold to Europe automobiles and automobile tires to the value of $92,000,000, a gain of 170 per cent.

During the year from September, 1913, to September, 1914, the year of peace under the present free-trade law, there were more idle cars rusting on the sidetracks of this country than ever before. But now these cars are moving again. They are carrying provisions down to the sea to be sent to the nations at war. Eliminate this business and the conditions of our railroads would be as bad as they were in the early part of 1914.

Our shipyards are busier than they have been for many years. But what are they doing? Building ships to carry supplies to the armies of Europe. Germany's great fleet of vessels is interned in the various ports of the world. Many vessels have been destroyed during the war. Never was there such a demand for shipping, but this is entirely due to the result of the contest in Europe.

THE CAUSE OF PROSPERITY.

Every industry in this Nation to-day that is enjoying even a normal degree of prosperity derives that prosperity from the awful tragedy that is now devastating the world. And official figures will demonstrate in every instance that this is true.

Our trade with Europe during the year from September, 1914, to September, 1915—the year of war—as compared with the year immediately preceding—the year of peace—increased in "war orders" alone over $1,010,000,000.

The wayfaring man, though a fool, can look upon these figures and there will read the story of our present prosperity.

Every prosperous mill and mine, field, and factory, and workshop in this Nation to-day is directly connected by the sordid threads of gain with the blood-red battle fields of Europe. Cut these connections and our prosperity would wither as does the blossoming harvest before the hot winds of the desert. When the last echo of the last cannon shot dies in Europe then dies our present prosperity.

PROSPERITY OF WAR.

Where do the products of our present prosperity go to-day? Where are they used?

Go to Europe, visit the front, where is being waged the most costly and bloody struggle in all human history, and you will know. You ride out in an American automobile to the trenches dug with American tools, lined with American lumber, protected by American barbed wire, manned with American guns, filled with American ammunition, defended by men equipped, clothed, and fed with American products. American aeroplanes are scouting overhead, the cavalry dashes to the front on American horses, the light artillery is brought forward on American mules.

Wait until the lull of battle comes. Wait until the white flag of truce is flying, and then leave the trenches and walk forth upon that awful field of slaughter. Examine the dying, white-faced soldier as he is carried from the field of death. His cap is made from American material. His uniform from cloth made in America. His shoes are made in America. Remove them—his socks are made in America. His underclothes are made in America. His cartridge belt is made in America, filled with cartridges made in America. His knapsack is made in America. It is filled with provisions produced in America. From his dying grasp falls his gun made in America. His medicine case and contents are from America. Unwrap the bloodstained bandage of first aid; it is made in America. He is taken to the hospital in an American ambulance. There the angels of pity—the Red Cross nurses from America—soothe the agony of his dying hour. He takes American medicine. He is operated upon with American surgical instruments. The anesthetic of mercy is from America. He is carried to his last resting place upon an American stretcher, placed in a trench dug with an American pick, and the mound above his uncoffined form is heaped and rounded with an American shovel.

These are the surroundings and here is the hell where our present prosperity is coined.

Whatever we may think of the justification or the righteousness of our actions in selling to the warring nations, certainly there is no sane mind on all God's footstool but what regrets the conditions that causes us to do it.

I have no intention of criticizing those who sell to the warring hosts in Europe. That is not the question I am now considering. Those who sell them food and clothing may believe that they are performing not only a lawful act but one of humanity and mercy. Those who sell them guns and ammunition may believe that they are performing the greatest and noblest duty in placing means of defense in the hands of those whom they believe to be fighting for life, for liberty, for home, for all that is dearest and most sacred in human existence. Others may think that such acts are in the highest degree to be condemned, and believe that financial gain is the only motive. I am not passing judgment upon these acts. But to boast of gains secured from such conditions is abhorent to all right-thinking human beings.

We might admire and applaud the physician that worked night and day for humanity in time of some great epidemic, even if he made money in so doing, but we would hate and despise him if he were to boast of the prosperity that he had coined from this human misery, and would consider him a sordid monster if he rejoiced at the calamity that brought him the opportunity. Whatever the justification of our acts for selling now at the rate of $50,000,000 per week to the belligerents, we would have no admiration for anyone that would boast of the prosperity coming to us from such sales. We would look upon anyone who would be proud of such prosperity with something of the same feeling of horror as we would look upon the ghoul that would boast of the wealth that he had secured in the darkness of the night by crawling his way over the field of death after the battle and robbing the dead and dying. We would have something of the same feeling of horror and disgust for anyone that would boast of this prosperity that we would have for the repulsive wretch that boasted of his wealth that consisted of the gold that he had extracted from the teeth of the grinning skeletons left as the grim relics of this awful destruction of human life.

Who will boast of the prosperity here that is measured by the blood and tears shed across the sea? Our prosperity is measured by the toll of human life taken from the armies of Europe, We want the prosperity of peace and not the prosperity of war. We want the prosperity that tells of happiness and content and joy, and not the prosperity of grief and anguish and despair. Our present prosperity is the prosperity of misery and misfortune. It is the prosperity of murder and passion. Our present prosperity is human life measured in money. Our present prosperity is coined from human hate, stained with human blood, mildewed with human tears, filled with human agony and despair, blackened with shattered hopes and ruined lives and marked and marred with tragic human death. I hope the terrible truth may be burned into the brain of the American people until no man will dare to boast of this battle-field prosperity. If the Democratic Party wishes to claim the credit for our present blood-soaked prosperity, then certainly there are none that desire to share that honor with it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FARLEY, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. CONRY, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SCOTT, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Henry Wachter, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. KEATING, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 651) prescribing certain duties for carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and for other purposes, and the same was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the list of committees.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. FERRIS (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 408, known as the water-power bill. It is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the bill by title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think, Mr. Speaker, this bill is too important to be considered without an opportunity to talk more than five minutes on it.

Mr. FERRIS. And, pending that, I was going to try to see if we could agree upon the division of the time. Is that satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. There is no adequate amount of time allowed pending debate in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, with Mr. HARRISON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and in lieu thereof the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that in lieu thereof it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, there are certain salient provisions that I think every adequate water-power bill should contain. I shall try to enumerate them:

First. No legislation, Executive order, or departmental ruling should permit the patenting or the title in fee to pass out of the Federal Government under any conditions. The fee title should be reserved in perpetuity to the United States.

Second. The dam sites should be leased for a period of time not longer than 50 years, without any entangling alliances or phrases difficult to understand, on which the courts might quibble or debate as to the relative rights of the Federal Government and the lessee after the term has expired.

Third. The recapture provision should provide that all nonperishable property, such as land, water rights, dam sites, good will, and so forth, should go back to the Federal Government at actual cost, and that all perishable property in connection with the plant should come back to the Federal Government at the end of the lease at its fair value. In both cases the interest of the public is conserved and made certain.

Fourth. Strong, clear, well-understood provisions should be inserted in the lease contract for the revocation of the permit for a violation of the conditions thereof.

Fifth. Provisions should be inserted in the lease requiring diligence and prompt construction of the plant so that the property may not be held for speculative purposes.

Sixth. A royalty or rental for the use of dam sites and the property of the Federal Government should be required in all cases except for municipalities who furnish current to consumers without profit.

Seventh. The Federal Government should at all times maintain its paramountcy and full control.

Eighth. Annual reports should be exacted from the power companies, so that the public might at all times know of their acts and doings.

Ninth. The Federal Government should reserve to itself full power to fix rates for service, capitalization, bond issues, and so forth, in interstate projects and where there is no public utilities commission for this purpose in intrastate projects.

Tenth. Each lease, permit, or consent of Congress should contain a provision that upon proof that any such permittees, lessees, or grantees have conspired to prevent the development of water power or to limit the output of already constructed plants the lease should be revocable in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman, section 1 of the pending bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to lease the reserved and unreserved Government lands of the United States, national parks excepted, for a term of not exceeding 50 years for the purpose of water-power development.

(a) The provision on page 2, from line 9 to 15, inclusive, requires the chief officer of the department who has jurisdiction over any of the reserve lands who finds that such lease for water-power and hydroelectric development will not injure or destroy or be inconsistent with the purposes for which the reservation was created. This is thought to be necessary to avoid conflict.

(b) The second provision of section 1, occurring on page 2 and within lines 16 to 20, inclusive, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant preference to applications for lease by States, counties, and municipalities when the applications are made for municipal uses and purposes. This is thought to be justice, for where a State, county, or municipality elects to develop hydroelectric power for their own use it is thought to be the highest use and in the interest of the public that they do not have to compete with some selfish corporation which might be able to marshal securities and become a more apt bidder therefor.

(c) The further provision in section 11, page 2, beginning in line 20 and including the remainder of the section, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue temporary permits which authorize the occupation of the land for water-power development for a period not exceeding one year to enable the applicant to secure necessary engineering data, determine the feasibility of the project, and to finance the same; further, authorizing the extension of the one-year period when, in the discretion of the Secretary, unusual weather conditions or other conditions beyond the control of the applicant occur and make the same advisable. The advisability of this is apparent, due to the fact that much of this development has to be carried on on borrowed money. It requires time and engineering investigation to develop whether or not a project is feasible, whether or not the product can be disposed of, whether or not the money can be secured to develop it, whether or not water rights are in conflict, and, if so, time is required to purchase them. It is thought that such a provision and such authority vested in the Secretary is in the public interest and will bring about development of water-power resources; will not unduly tie up the property and cold storage it, so to speak, but will allow honest investors an opportunity to take the necessary preliminary steps looking to a final development of the property.

SECTION 2.

Section 2 provides that the lease shall contain a provision for the diligent, orderly, and reasonable development and continuous operation, subject to market conditions. Section 2 also enables the Secretary of the Interior, when he thinks it advisable, to put a provision in the lease denying to the operator or lessee the right to contract for the disposition of more than 50 per cent of the total output to any one consumer. It is thought to be of the highest importance that the lease, which is the original contract between the Government and the applicant, should bear all these provisions, which are almost sure to become more and more important during the life of the lease. It will also be observed that section 2 provides that the Secretary of the Interior may limit the amount of electrical energy that may be sold to any one person. It is thought wise to give him this power, but it was not thought the part of wisdom to make it mandatory. In some instances such a provision would be very helpful to ward off and break down monopoly where it exists, but where no monopoly exists it might be oppressive and unnecessary.

SECTION 3.

Section 3 provides that where hydroelectric power is generated in two or more States, the regulation and control of service and of charges for service to consumers and of the issuance of stock and bonds by the lessee is conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be provided for by Federal statute. This is thought extremely advisable; otherwise, where electricity is generated in more than one State and State control is ineffective and inoperative, then and in that event it is thought to be the part of wisdom to confer upon the Secretary of the Interior power to regulate the same. It was also thought important to have the legislation indicate that the time might come when Congress in its wisdom might elect to confer this power either upon the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other Federal water power commission that Congress might create. Then, and in that event, the power of the Secretary of the Interior would cease, and such power step in and take control as Congress might provide.

The provision occurring on page 4, beginning at the end of line 4, is an antimonopoly provision, which authorizes combinations in the interest of efficient service, but expressly prohibits combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, expressed or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or within any one State, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service. It will be observed that it is an extremely difficult task to properly regulate monopoly in connection with water power, for numerous instances can be cited when to allow combinations and union of effort and enterprise is found to be strictly in the interest of the public; but, of course, the general rule is otherwise, and it was the thought of the committee in dealing with this intricate question that the widest latitude should be given to the Secretary of the Interior, and that by experience and personal contact with the subject he could handle the matter more intelligently without too many fetters and restraints.

SECTION 4.

Section 4 provides that without the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior the lessee or power development company shall not sell or deliver power to a distributing company except in case of an emergency, and then only for a period not exceeding 30 days. It further provides that the lease shall not be assignable or transferable without the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

The provision occurring on page 4, section 4, line 17, expressly provides that the lessee shall be allowed to execute mortgages or trust deed on the property for the purpose of financing the project. It expressly provides, however, that in the event of such transfer, whether voluntary or involuntary, it shall be subject to all the conditions of approval under which such rights were held as contained in the prior lease and in the act. This provision is thought to be imperative, due to the fact that much, if not quite all, of the development of hydroelectric energy must of necessity be done on borrowed capital, and it was not the wish of the committee to pass an act that would prevent financiers from financing the projects. It was the earnest wish of the committee and the proponents of this bill that the bill be made workable; that the bill be made attractive to capital, so that early and speedy development would occur, thereby reducing the cost of power to all who use it; and that the results intended would flow from the highest use of the natural resources bequeathed to us by nature.

SECTION 5.

Section 5 provides for the retaking of the property at the end of the lease, and indicates just how the property is to be retaken. In a word, it provides that all nonperishable property, which is sure to increase in value rather than decrease, such as lands, water rights, rights of way, and good will, the actual cost shall be paid therefor. The section further provides that all other property, such as structures, machinery, and so forth, that are apt to depreciate rather than increase in value, it is thought to be in the interest of the public to provide that the fair value shall be paid therefor, so that in retaking the property the public will not be forced to pay more than the property is actually worth. Your committee feels sure that section 5 lays down the correct rule for a retaking of the property.

The section contains a provision on page 5, line 21, which expressly provides that the reasonable value referred to shall not include or be affected by the value of the franchise or good will or profits to be earned on pending contracts or any other intangible element. It was the thought of the committee that this was clearly in the interest of the public. It was thought that it was but common justice that when we lease the property of the Government for a term of years the lessee should not be permitted to heap up the unearned increment, the good will, and other intangible elements that naturally go along with a business of this sort. It is the thought that the only thing that distinguishes a lease from a grant in perpetuity is the ability of the Federal Government to retake it. Therefore, it is the thought of your committee that this recapture provision of this bill or any other bill is of the highest importance and one that should be looked into carefully.

SECTION 6.

Section 6 lays down the three specific things that the Federal Government can do at the expiration of any lease made under this act. First, the Federal Government may retake it and operate it itself; second, it may renew the lease to the original lessee upon such terms and conditions and for such term as may be authorized under the then existing applicable laws; third, the Secretary of the Interior, upon the expiration of the lease, may lease the property of the original lessee to a new lessee upon such new conditions, new terms, and for such new periods of time as the applicable laws of that date authorize, providing that the new lessee shall pay for the property according to the rule laid down in section 5 of this act. It is the thought that section 6 makes it sufficiently clear that at the expiration of the term the Federal Government will have a free hand to do what it desires to do with the property. It is thought that anything short of this would be giving away more than the public or Congress would intend to do. This section 6 merely magnifies the necessity of an appropriate recapture provision; for example, if the Federal Government elected to lease the property to a new lessee, one of the first controversies that would arise would be, Can I secure possession of the property, and what is the rate I must pay for the property of the preceding lessee? If the method of recapture was simple, easy, plain, and well understood and on equitable grounds, so that the lessee would not have to pay for watered stock and inflated values, then and in that event prospective lessees for the property would be numerous, the rights would be valuable to the Government, and good results would flow in every direction.

But, on the other hand, if the method of recapture was onerous, complex, and difficult of understanding the rights of the Government would be of little or no value, applicants for the property would be few and hesitating, and the disaster that would come to the public by reason of such a provision would be that the original lessee would continue to hold the property and in all probability refuse to submit to new conditions, and while the Congress would have intended to issue a lease, would have in fact and in reality issued a grant in perpetuity, a thing that this Congress does not desire and a thing that the American people will not in silence permit to be done.

SECTION 7.

This section contemplates the arising of a condition which would warrant the lessee in contracting for the supply of electrical energy beyond the term of his lease. In that event the section authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, if he deems it for the public interest, to give his approval of the execution of such contracts, and in the event such approval is given the Government of the United States or the original lessee's successor is required to fulfill the term of the contract which extends beyond the life of the original lease. There will be a difference of opinion about the advisability of this section. It was the thought of your committee, however, that instances might arise where it would be highly necessary and important that the original lessee have more or less freedom in bidding for contracts in order to meet competition, and in some cases it might be necessary to go beyond the life of the lease. It is thought that the necessity for this is brought about by the fact that much of the water power potentiality is already in the hands of private persons, who of course can contract for service for terms indefinite in character. To not give the Government lessees under this act a fair opportunity to compete with the already entrenched water-power companies might be a burden and handicap on our Government lessees greater than we should inflict and might serve as an aid to power companies already entrenched, who would delight to longer be without competition and without additional development of electricity. I repeat, there will be a difference of opinion about this section, but the more the committee thought about it and the more we studied the situation the more we were convinced that to give the Secretary this power was sure to result in good, and the committee was unanimously of the opinion that it should be done.

SECTION 8.

Section 8 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to enter into contracts with the lessee and to specify in the lease such charge of rental for all power developed by the lessee for any purpose, as may be deemed appropriate in each individual case. The section further provides that the proceeds from such hydroelectric development shall be paid into the reclamation fund, and after it has been used by the fund for one term and returned to the reclamation fund, one-half of the moneys so returned shall be turned over to the States to be appropriated by the State legislature for the benefit of the public schools and other educational institutions or for public improvement, or for both, as the legislature may elect.

Under the reclamation act of 1902 all proceeds from the sale of Government lands goes into the reclamation fund, and inasmuch as the development of the water power on nonnavigable streams are on the public lands of the United States, it would seem proper that the returns should likewise go into the reclamation fund. Under the terms of the reclamation act the moneys so used for reclamation purposes in each instance become a lien upon the land and are later returned to the fund for disposition as Congress may provide. Hence, it is thought that until water power reaches a higher state of development and until more of the arid lands of the West have been irrigated it would seem advisable to use the proceeds for the further irrigation and development of the West and treat it as a fund derived from the sale of public lands.

The provision commencing in line 19, page 7, provides that where water power is generated by municipalities for municipal purposes only that such leases shall be executed by the Secretary of the Interior without rental or charge. It also provides that for development of not in excess of 25 horsepower leases may be issued to individuals or associations for mining or domestic uses without charge. It will be observed that this is a relaxation of the act where States, counties, or municipalities elect to construct, own, and operate their own light or power plant. It will be observed that the use is restricted for municipal purposes only and without profit.

It will further be observed that the small projects of less than 25 horsepower are used by individual settlers for pumping water and other domestic uses and that it was thought that it was not advisable for the Government to try to collect revenue therefrom. Many such minor plants are now in operation, and it was the thought of your committee that they should not be molested and that additional enterprises small in character would be advisable and without objection.

SECTION 9.

Section 9 is thought to be a provision which will insure regulation of hydroelectric power development within a State where the State has refused or failed for any cause to provide for a public utilities commission which would have power to regulate rates, service, issuance of stock and bonds, and so forth, and until such time as the State creates such a commission the Secretary of the Interior would have power to regulate it. This is thought to be no invasion of State rights or no trampling upon the laws of the States, for if for any reason the regulation of an intrastate project by the Secretary of the Interior is offensive to them the matter could readily be obviated by the enactment of a law providing for a public utilities commission, and surely no one would advocate that where the State did not regulate that the Federal Government should likewise be precluded from regulation.

SECTION 10.

Section 10 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to allow lands that have been heretofore reserved for water-power purposes to be used for other and additional purposes, subject always to the superior right of the Government or its assignees to develop hydroelectric power thereon. It will be observed that many water-power sites have been withdrawn over the country under the Pickett Act of June 25, 1910. In some instances large areas were withdrawn, portions of which in all probability will not be necessary. It was therefore thought the part of wisdom to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allow these lands to be used for other purposes, always reserving to the Federal Government the right of overflow and always subordinate to the superior use of hydroelectric development, and for this reason the section was incorporated. The provision in section 10, in line 4, page 9, provides that where locations, entries, or selections are filed or have been allowed the land shall proceed to patent, subject to a limitation to be inserted in the patent which shall preserve to the Federal Government all rights for power purposes.

SECTION 11.

Section 11 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to examine books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of water rights, lands, easements, and other property acquired, production, use, distribution, and sale of energy, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require. It provides further that any person making any false statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury. It was the thought of your committee that as the Government was parting with this property for a long term of years that it ought to reserve to itself the right to know just what its lessees were doing with the property in each and every case, and it is thought that section 11 as written in the bill will accomplish that.

SECTION 12.

The section provides that whenever the terms of the lease are broken the lease may be canceled by a court of competent jurisdiction. There will be some difference of opinion as to whether the Secretary ought to have this summary power as distinguished from having it tried in a court, but the committee, after carefully considering it, was of the opinion that the lessee would have to incur such a large expense it was most too great a hazard to allow the lease to be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior. It was thought more advisable to have it adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction, and to do otherwise, it was thought, would frighten away development and be disastrous to the highest development of water power.

SECTION 13.

Section 13 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. This gives the Secretary full power to make appropriate rules and regulations applicable to the circumstances in each project. It was thought that market conditions and other conditions will make the several projects widely differ, and it was thought best to give the Secretary of the Interior full power to make rules and regulations applicable to each individual case. It is apparently impossible and inadvisable to try to write into the statutes harsh general provisions which would be necessary in some instances and wholly inoperative and unworkable in others. The testimony of all the experts before the committee was to the effect that the greatest latitude should be given to the Secretary, so he can properly proceed in the widely differing cases.

SECTION 14.

Section 14 is a section disclaiming any intention on the part of the Federal Government to interfere with vested rights or the State laws with reference to water rights or the appropriate distribution of water used for irrigation or municipal purposes. It is thought that water-power development ordinarily will not in any way interfere with the rights of the States, but this disclaimer has put any doubts to rest that may have arisen in the premises.

SECTION 15.

Section 15 repeals acts in conflict with the legislation under consideration and excepts certain acts of Congress which it is not desired to repeal.

The proviso on page 11, beginning with line 3, shall not be construed as revoking or as affecting any permits or valid existing rights of way heretofore given or granted pursuant to law, but at the option of the permittee any permit heretofore given for the development, generation, transmission, or utilization of hydroelectric power may be surrendered and the permittee given a lease for the same premises under the provisions of this act.

ESTIMATED POTENTIAL HORSEPOWER IN THE UNITED STATES.

The estimates for the developed and undeveloped potential horsepower of the United States range from 20,000,000 to 200,000,000 horsepower. A more conservative estimate ranges from 28,000,000 to 35,000,000 horsepower. Only 6,000,000 horsepower have been developed and are now in use. Estimated products for 1905 produced by hydroelectric power $17,000,000,000, or seven times the total receipts of the railroads of the country.

LOCATION OF HYDROELECTRIC ENERGY BY GROUPS OF STATES.

North Atlantic group of States, 2,200,000 horsepower, or 7.9 per cent of the aggregate.

South Atlantic group of States, 2,300,000 horsepower, or 8.2 per cent of the aggregate.

North Central group of States, 1,700,000 horsepower, or 6 per cent of the aggregate.

South Central group of States, 1,500,000 horsepower, or 5.3 per cent of the aggregate.

Western group of States, 20,400,000 horsepower, or 72.6 per cent of the aggregate.

A later and more complete compilation of figures has been made up from estimates gathered by the Geological Survey in 1908 for the National Conservation Association, and later revised and brought up to date by the Commissioner of Corporations in his report on Water Power Developed in the United States, 1912. It is interesting to observe the amount of potential horsepower by States and the percentage each bears to the whole. It is interesting to observe that approximately 72 per cent of the whole amount of potential water power in the United States is in the western group of States, a large portion of which will come under the provisions of the bill now under discussion.

Feeling that the same will be of interest and of value, I insert them in the RECORD at this point, so that more accurate knowledge may be had as to the potential water power in the United States, in plain figures, both with a minimum and a maximum estimate:

It will doubtless be of interest to the House to know the amount of water power, steam power, and gas power in commercial central stations, municipal central stations, street and electric railways, and a few manufacturing plants for the year 1915. It is believed that the data for all except manufacturing plants is substantially complete. It is not asserted that the figures are complete for manufacturing plants, but only for the larger water-power developments employed in manufacturing. The best estimate as to the water-power development for all uses in the United States is considerably in excess of 6,000,000 horsepower. Of the total of 5,346,699 horsepower shown under the heading "Water power, all stations," 736,197 horsepower is used in manufacturing. The balance of 4,610,502 horsepower is strictly public-service use. The following table shows by States the total amount of water power, steam power, and gas power, first, by commercial central stations and similarly by municipal central stations. Of course, if a total of power for a given State is desired, it will be necessary to add together the amounts for the commercial central stations and the amounts for municipal central stations, if it is desired to be figured in horsepower, and if in kilo-volt-amperes, then it would be necessary to add the two columns together headed "Generators," which would give the total power in a given State by that method of measurement rather than by horsepower. It is as follows:

NOTES.—This table summarizes the data shown in detail on succeeding pages. The term "steam power" includes steam engines and steam turbines; "water power" includes water wheels, turbines, and motors; and "gas power" includes internal combustion engines using either gas or oil fuel.

TWO KINDS OF WATER POWER.

First, water power developed on the navigable streams of the country, more or less interlinked with navigation.

Second, water power developed on the nonnavigable streams where the Federal Government owns the dam site or the public lands over which the rights of way must traverse. The Adamson bill had to do with the former, this bill has to do with the latter.

WATER POWER A PUBLIC UTILITY.

There was a time when water-power development was considered a local, private enterprise in which only the local community was interested and only the local community had to do with its regulation. This theory has long since been exploded, and it is now generally admitted to be a public utility by all who have had occasion to study the subject.

Water power was once considered a private snap, but it is now one of the greatest modern agencies used in the development of this country. It will be interesting to the House to know that the total output of products manufactured by water power in this country in a single year amounted to $17,000,000,000. It will again be interesting to know that this is seven times more than the combined receipts of all the railroads of this country.

In the debate last year quite a good deal was said as to the concentration in the control, development, distribution, and sale of electric power. Nearly every author who writes on the subject attempts to treat it, most every speaker in and out of the House makes some reference to it. It seems to me of transcendent importance that the House know of the best available figures, prepared by the Geological Survey, the Census Bureau, and the Bureau of Corporations, and compiled and arranged by the water-power divisions of the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture, and for which assistance I at this time desire to make grateful acknowledgment.

I repeat, it seems to me that the House ought to have the benefit of the best figures on the subject, showing, by States, first, who owns the water power in the several States; second, how many electric stations there are in each of the several States; third, the total amount of water power in the several States; fourth, the total amount of steam power there is in each State; fifth, the total amount of power, all told; and sixth, the individual percentages in each State.

I incorporate at this point, as a part of my remarks, these figures, believing that they will be of value to any student of the water-power subject, or to anyone else who cares to hurriedly look up a given proposition.

It is as follows:

NOTE.—All but 2 of the corporations listed hereon, the International Paper Co. (16) and the Union Carbide Co. (86), are engaged in public-service operations.

A more simple and easily understood compilation has likewise been made for the several States as to who the large owners are in each State, what per cent of the developed power they own, what relation it bears to the whole, and it would seem to me that from time to time students of the water-power problem, as well as those seeking development in a given State, would find the following summary of value. It is as follows:

ALABAMA.

One company, the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co., has 87.9 per cent of the developed water power and 57.1 per cent of the total power of the State. Eight corporations control 90.1 per cent of the total power, and three of these 98.8 per cent of the water power. Thirty-four municipalities have but 0.8 per cent of the water power and 4.7 per cent of the total power.

ARIZONA.

Five companies control 47.4 per cent of the total power. Only one of these, the Arizona Power Co., has developed any water power. It has 26.8 per cent of the total for the State. The greater part of the developed water power is owned by the United States Reclamation Service, which, together with two municipalities, has 72.1 per cent of the water power and 27.6 per cent of the total power.

ARKANSAS.

Water power affords but little over 4 per cent of the total power. So far as data of developed water power could be secured, the total appears to be owned by two companies. Eleven companies control 73.5 per cent of the total power from all sources. The 17 municipal power stations have no water power and but 9.9 per cent of the total power in the State.

CALIFORNIA.

Fifteen corporations control 88.6 per cent of the total primary power in the State, and 12 control 87.8 per cent of all the developed water power. Of these the largest is the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., with 20.1 per cent of the water power, or 152,080 horsepower, and 20.5 per cent of the total power, or 260,620 horsepower. Four corporations, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., the Pacific Light & Power Corporation, the Southern California Edison Co., and the Western Power Co. together control more than half of both the water power and the total power in the State. Municipal developments comprise 6.3 per cent of the water power and 4.5 per cent of the total power.

COLORADO.

Eight corporations control 73 per cent of the total power, and five of these control 77 per cent of the water power. The largest is the Colorado Power Co., with 45.2 per cent of the water power and 24 per cent of the total power. This company, together with the Doherty Operating Co., the Utah Securities Corporation, and H. M. Byllesby & Co., control 68 per cent of the water power and 54.4 per cent of the total power. Ten municipalities own only 1.1 per cent of the water power and 1.9 per cent of the total power.

CONNECTICUT.

Eight corporations control 92.7 per cent of the developed water power. Of these, one concern, Stone & Webster, controls 38.2 per cent. Four companies, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., the United Illuminating Co., the Hartford Electric Light Co., and Stone & Webster, control 63 per cent of the water power in the State. These four, together with 11 others, control 87.1 per cent of the total power. The six municipal plants have no water power and but 5.6 per cent of the total power.

The National Properties Co. controls 81.8 per cent of the total electric-power installation for which data have been secured. Six municipalities have 8.5 per cent. Water-power development is negligible.

FLORIDA.

Two concerns, Stone & Webster and the Florida Power Co., control 99.6 per cent of the developed water power and 32.7 per cent of the total power. Eight companies control 58.6 per cent of the total power. Seventeen municipalities control 26.6 per cent of the total power, but have no water power.

GEORGIA.

Four companies, the Georgia Railway & Power Co., Stone & Webster, the Georgia Light, Power & Railways Co., and J. G. White & Co. (Inc.), control 84.4 per cent of the developed water power and 73.8 per cent of the total power. Twelve companies control 88.1 per cent of the total power, and 10 of these control 93.7 per cent of the water power. Seventy-five municipalities own but 0.7 per cent of the water power and 5.2 per cent of the total power. Of the total power for the State as shown on the summary table, 5.8 per cent is used in manufacturing. On account of this inclusion the percentages of control of strictly public-service power by certain corporations are greater than the above figures would indicate

IDAHO.

The Utah Securities Corporation controls 48.3 per cent of the developed water power and 45.5 per cent of the total power. This company together with the National Securities Corporation control 70.8 per cent of the water power and 67.9 per cent of the total power in the State. The United States Reclamation Service and four municipalities control 9.4 per cent of the water power and 8.8 per cent of the total power.

ILLINOIS.

Only 29.1 per cent of the developed water power is controlled by the major corporations. Of the total power, however, 89.2 per cent is controlled by 13 public-service corporations, one of which, the Commonwealth Edison Co., controls 55.6 per cent of the total developed power. Eighty-six municipalities, including the Chicago sanitary district, have 63.4 per cent of the developed water power and 6 per cent of the total power.

INDIANA.

This State has a relatively small water-power development. Of such development as has been made, 70.5 per cent is controlled by the Middle West Utilities Co. and the Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., the former with 54.4 per cent, the latter with 16.1 per cent. Thirteen corporations control 75 per cent of the total power while 70 municipalities have but 2.5 per cent of the water power and 9 per cent of the total power.

IOWA.

Stone & Webster control 94.1 per cent of the total developed water power, equivalent to 47.4 per cent of the total power in the State. Thirteen corporations together control 80.7 per cent of the total power and five of these 96.1 per cent of the water power. Seventy municipalities have 0.4 per cent of the water power and 5.3 per cent of the total power.

KANSAS.

The Doherty Operating Co. controls 59.9 per cent of the developed water power. This company with two others controls 81.4 per cent of the water power. Seven concerns control 46.7 per cent of the total power in the State. Ninety municipal stations have 1.1 per cent of the water power and 24 per cent of the total power.

KENTUCKY.

As far as data are available there is no water-power development in this State by central stations or electric railways. Two companies, the Louisville Traction Co. and H. M. Byllesby & Co., control 60.6 per cent of the total developed steam power. Eleven companies control 84.7 per cent of the total power, and 18 municipalities 6 per cent.

LOUISIANA.

This State has no water-power development of consequence. One concern, the United Gas & Electric Corporation, of Connecticut, controls 73.4 per cent of the total developed power from all sources. Six companies control 85.1 per cent. Twenty-five municipalities have 8.9 per cent of the total for the State.

MAINE.

Over 58 per cent, chiefly water power, of the total power shown for the State of Maine is used in manufacturing. Of the total thus shown the largest percentages are controlled by the E. W. Clark Management Corporation, with 13.4 per cent of the water power and 16.4 per cent of the total power, and the International Paper Co. with 16.5 per cent of the water power and 15.9 per cent of the total power. Sixteen concerns control 91.1 per cent of the water power and 91 per cent of the total power. Five municipalities have only 0.7 per cent of the water power and 0.8 per cent of the total power.

MARYLAND AND DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Water-power developments are of little importance, affording but 1.5 per cent of the total developed power. Nine companies control 94.9 per cent of the total power, and three of these—the United Railways & Electric Co. of Baltimore, the Consolidated Electric Light & Power Co. of Baltimore, and the Washington Railway & Electric Co.—control 78.8 per cent of the total developed power. Seven municipal stations in Maryland have but 1.1 per cent of the total power developed in the State and District of Columbia combined.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Nineteen corporations control 83.5 per cent of the total power in the State, and eight of these control 77.8 per cent of the water power. Two companies—the New England Power Co. of Maine and the Turners Falls Power & Electric Co.—control 56.2 per cent of the developed water power. Thirty-three municipal stations have 0.8 per cent of the water power and 4.2 per cent of the total power.

MICHIGAN.

Eighteen corporations control 79.5 per cent of the total developed power and 15 of these control 76.2 per cent of the developed water power. Two concerns—the North American Co. and the Commonwealth Power, Railway & Light Co.—control 53 per cent of the total power; and two—the Commonwealth Power, Railway & Light Co. and the Union Carbide Co.—control 47.6 per cent of the water power. One hundred and four municipalities own 5.1 per cent of the developed water power and 8.8 per cent of the total power. Of the total power for the State, as given in the summary tables, 4.2 per cent is used in manufacturing. Were it not for this inclusion the percentage of control by certain companies of strictly public-service power would be somewhat greater than the above figures indicate.

MINNESOTA.

Twelve companies control 89.9 per cent of the water power and 82.2 per cent of the total power. Four of these control 71.9 per cent of the water power and 65.4 per cent of the total power. One hundred and fifteen municipalities have only one-half of 1 per cent of the water power and 5.7 per cent of the total power.

MISSISSIPPI.

So far as data are available Mississippi has no water power developed by public-service corporations. In the total power there is no marked concentration, the largest amount controlled by one concern—the Gulfport & Mississippi Coast Traction Co.—being 14.1 per cent. Forty-two municipal stations have 25 per cent of the total power of the State.

MISSOURI.

Nine corporations control 86.3 per cent of the total power and one—the Doherty Operating Co.—controls 98.7 per cent of the water power. Three companies—the North American Co., the Doherty Operating Co., and the Kansas City Railway & Light Co.—control 78 per cent of the total power in the State. Six per cent of the total is developed in municipal stations.

MONTANA.

Four corporations control 97.4 per cent of the water power and 91.8 per cent of the total power. Two of these—the Montana Power Co. and the Amalgamated Copper Co., affiliated concerns—control 94.4 per cent of the water power and 88.7 per cent of the total power. Municipal plants have no water power and but four-tenths of 1 per cent of the total power.

NEBRASKA.

Only 23.6 per cent of the developed water power is controlled by the major electric power corporations. The most important of these corporations are the Omaha Electric Light & Power Co. and the Omaha & Council Bluffs Street Railway Co. These two companies control 48 per cent of the public-service power in the State, but have no water power. The 73 municipal stations have 46.8 per cent of the developed water power and 19.7 per cent of the total power.

NEVADA.

One concern, Stone & Webster, controls 73.6 per cent of the water power. This company, together with the Utah Copper Co., control 74.1 per cent of the total power in the State. Eighteen and seven-tenths per cent of the water power is owned by the United States Reclamation Service. There are no municipal developments, although one town purchases and distributes power.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Three manufacturing concerns, the Berlin Mills Co., the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., and the International Paper Co., have 64 per cent of the developed water power and 48 per cent of the total power. Fourteen companies, both manufacturing and public service, control 88.1 per cent of the water power and 85.9 per cent of the total power. Two municipalities have 0.6 per cent of the water power and 0.8 per cent of the total power.

NEW JERSEY.

Less than 3 per cent of the total power in the State is water power. Of this amount 87.5 per cent is controlled by two companies, the New Jersey General Security Co. and W. S. Barstow & Co. Of the total power, 68.6 per cent is controlled by one concern, the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey. Nine other concerns together control 17.2 per cent of the total power. Ten municipalities have 1.1 per cent of the water power and 0.9 per cent of the total power.

NEW MEXICO.

Water powers afford less than 4 per cent of the total developed power. Of the total power the Federal Light & Traction Co. controls 37.1 per cent. Eight companies together have 66.9 per cent of the total. The United States Reclamation Service and certain municipalities, with four stations, have 22.9 per cent of the total developed power.

NEW YORK.

Twenty corporations control 81.4 per cent of the total developed power and 14 of these control 74.3 per cent of the developed water power. Five companies control over one-half of the total power and two over one-third of the water power. Forty-eight municipalities have 0.4 per cent of the water power and 0.6 per cent of the total power. Of the totals for the State, as appearing on the summary table, nearly 12 per cent is power used in manufacturing. If this were omitted from the totals the percentage of total public-service power controlled by the five largest corporations would be nearly 60 per cent and of public-service water power by the two largest water-power companies, 45 per cent.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Two companies, the Southern Power Co. and the Carolina Power & Light Co., control 75.1 per cent of the developed water power and 66.5 per cent of the total power. Eight corporations control 94 per cent of the water power, and fourteen 89.1 per cent of the total power. Forty-nine municipalities have 1 per cent of the water power and 5.5 per cent of the total power. Since the totals for the State contain a certain amount of power used in manufactures, the percentages of strictly public-service power controlled by the several corporations is greater than the above figures would indicate.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Water-power development in this State is negligible. One concern, H. M. Byllesby & Co., controls 36.7 per cent of the total electric power in 3 stations, as compared with 22.3 per cent controlled by the United States Reclamation Service and certain municipalities in 12 stations.

OHIO.

Ohio shows no marked concentration of electric-power development, although 20 concerns control 77.8 per cent of the total in the State, and 7 of these have 67.1 per cent of the total developed water power. One hundred and fourteen municipalities own 0.9 per cent of the water power and 7.5 per cent of the total power.

OKLAHOMA.

Nine companies control 61.9 per cent of the total power. Water-power development in the State amounts to but little over 2 per cent of the total. Sixty-one municipalities have 20.4 per cent of the water power and 16.7 per cent of the total power.

OREGON.

E. W. Clark & Co. Management Corporation and the Crown-Willamette Paper Co. control 67.7 per cent of the water power and 65.7 per cent of the total power in the State. Seven companies control 86.4 per cent of the water power and 82.5 per cent of the total power. Municipal plants contain 3 per cent of the water power and 2.2 per cent of the total power.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Fifteen corporations control 73 per cent of the total public-service power in the State, and six of these control 88.2 per cent of the water power. One concern, the Pennsylvania Water & Power Co., controls 70 per cent of the developed water power. Forty-one municipalities have 0.3 per cent of the water power and 1.6 per cent of the total power of the State.

RHODE ISLAND.

As far as information is available, Stone & Webster control the entire amount of developed water power used in public-service operations. Four companies—the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., the Narragansett Electric Lighting Co., the Massachusetts Lighting Companies, and Stone & Webster—control 98.3 per cent of the total public-service power in the State. There appear to be no municipal developments.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

One concern, the Southern Power Co., controls 56.3 per cent of the developed water power and 50 per cent of the total power. Twelve companies control 96.4 per cent of the water power and thirteen 92.3 per cent of the total power. The 21 municipal plants have no water power and but 1.7 per cent of the total power. As noted in the summary table for the State, 9.6 per cent of the power included in the totals is used in manufacturing. The percentage of strictly public-service power controlled by the several corporations listed is, therefore, greater than the above percentages would indicate.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The Homestake Mining Co. has 47.8 per cent of the total water power in the State. Three other companies control 43.1 per cent, making a total of 90.9 per cent for the four. The 17 municipal stations have no water power and but 5 per cent of the total power.

TENNESSEE.

Two corporations, the E. W. Clark Co. Management Corporation and the Chattanooga & Tennessee River Power Co., control 88.9 per cent of the developed water power and 62.5 per cent of the total power. Five companies control 98.3 per cent of the water power and nine companies 92.9 per cent of the total power. Twenty-nine municipal plants contain but one-third of 1 per cent of the water power and but 3.7 per cent of the total power.

TEXAS.

Three companies control 68.5 per cent of the water power, and two companies—Stone & Webster and the American Power & Light Co.—control 53 per cent of the total power. Thirteen companies control 77 per cent of the total power. Twenty-one municipalities have 3.3 per cent of the water power and 3.8 per cent of the total power.

UTAH.

One concern, the Utah Securities Corporation, controls 82.2 per cent of the developed water power and 84.3 per cent of the total power. Twenty-two municipalities have 7.4 per cent of the water power and 6 per cent of the total power.

VERMONT.

Two public-service companies, the New England Power Co., of Maine, and the American Gas Co., and one manufacturing concern, the International Paper Co., control 51.6 per cent of the total developed water power and 44.4 per cent of the total power. Fifteen companies control 90.7 per cent of the water power and 89.2 per cent of the total power. Thirteen municipalities have 4.2 per cent of the water power and 4.6 per cent of the total power. As noted for several other States, power used in manufacturing to the extent of 2 per cent of the total has been included. Were it not for this inclusion the percentages of control of public-service power by certain corporations would be considerably greater than would be indicated by the above percentages, or those shown in the summary table for the State.

VIRGINIA.

Two public-service corporations, the Virginia Railway & Power Co. and H. M. Byllesby & Co., and one manufacturing concern, the Riverside & Dan River Cotton Mills, control 56.4 per cent of the developed water power and 56.9 per cent of the total power. Fourteen companies control 85.3 per cent of the total power, and nine of these control 80.5 per cent of the water power. Fifteen municipal stations control 6.5 per cent of the water power and 6 per cent of the total power.

WASHINGTON.

Two concerns, Stone & Webster and the Washington Water Power Co., control 53.8 per cent of the water power and 54.7 per cent of the total power. Ten corporations control 78.6 per cent of the water power and twelve 77.5 per cent of the total power. Washington has a considerable municipal development, 12 cities and towns owning 16.5 per cent of the water power and 16 per cent of the total power in the State.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Five companies control 97.3 per cent of the developed water power, and one concern, the Union Carbide Co., 49.4 per cent. Fifteen companies control 85.1 per cent of the total power. Six municipalities have 1.3 per cent of the total power, but no water power.

WISCONSIN.

Seventy-four and six-tenths per cent of the developed water power is distributed among 18 corporations. The largest percentages in control of single corporations are 11.5 per cent by H. M. Byllesby & Co. and 10.7 per cent by the Wisconsin River Power Co. Similarly 71.2 per cent of the total developed power of the State is distributed among 19 corporations, the North American Co. having the largest individual percentage of 25.5 per cent. Eighty-five municipalities have 1.4 per cent of the water power and 4.1 per cent of the total power. The totals for this State contain a considerable amount—19 per cent of the total—of power used in manufacture, hence the percentages of strictly public-service power controlled by the several companies is greater than the above percentage would indicate.

WYOMING.

Water-power development is of minor importance in Wyoming, the total amounting to only 2,544 horsepower. The total electric-power installation from all sources is less than 18,000 horsepower. Two corporations control 44.2 per cent of this and nine 77.7 per cent. The United States Army and municipal stations utilize 34 per cent of the water power and 7.1 per cent of the total power.

Again, treating the proposition as a whole, I take it that it would be of interest to the Congress, as well as to the American people, to know the names of 18 of the larger owners of water powers in the United States. I accordingly set them out below:

1. Stone & Webster.
2. Montana Power Co.
3. Utah Securities Corporation.
4. E. W. Clark & Co. Management Corporation.
5. Southern Power Co.
6. Hydraulic Co. of Niagara Falls.
7. Pacific Gas & Electric Co.
8. Pennsylvania Water & Power Co.
9. Pacific Light & Power Corporation.
10. H. M. Byllesby & Co.
11. The Niagara Falls Power Co.
12. Washington Water Power Co.
13. Georgia Railway Light & Power Co.
14. New England Power Co. of Maine.
15. Western Power Co.
16. Alabama Traction Light & Power Co.
17. Commonwealth Power, Railway & Light Co.
18. United Railways Investment Co.

I take it that it will likewise be of interest to know that of the approximately 6,000,000 horsepower now developed, the 18 just above enumerated own 2,356,521 water horsepower, more than one-half (51.1 per cent) of the total water power used in public-service operations in the United States. Of the 18 corporations named, the first 9 control more than one-third (33.7 per cent) of the total, and the first 6 more than one-fourth (25.3 per cent).

I hope I display not too much egotism in asking Members interested in water power to consult the hearings held before our committee. I believe they contain almost the last word, at least so far as the development of water power has gone. We had before us the best engineers of this country. We had before us Hon. Franklin K. Lane, a student and a patriot on this subject. We had likewise before us ex-Secretary Fisher, who is a well-known authority on the subject. Also ex-Forester Gifford Pinchot, who is and has been thinking faster than the time in which he lives—he has been quite a pathfinder on this most interesting subject; Dr. George Otis Smith, head of the Geological Survey, a thoroughgoing, patriotic man; and Mr. Merrill, a brilliant student of the subject, from the Agricultural Department. I think it is not too much to say the hearings had before us, taken altogether, are, considering the present state of power development, the last word on the subject. If those interested in the subject will read from page 381 to page 385 of the hearings, they will be amazed at the concentration of capital in water power that has already taken place.

It is as near frenzied finance as can be described. No one would believe such concentration could take place in so short a time. I repeat, water-power development began in 1890, just 24 years ago. It is as yet only in its swaddling clothes.

CONCENTRATION OF CAPITAL IN ELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT.

The Public Lands Committee hearings, on pages 381 to 385, disclose that abnormal, unusual, and almost inexplicable concentration has been going on in the water power of this country. It discloses that 90 per cent of the developed water power is now in the hands of 27 holding companies and 24 operating companies, so interlinked and intertwined with interlocked directorates that it is impossible to separate their interests or to fathom their power. The total amount of securities held by these 27 companies is $275,000,000. The names of these companies and much information about them appear on pages 656 to 671, inclusive. I do not call attention to this abnormal concentration of capital to startle or amaze, but it is a question worthy of comment and worthy of intelligent thought. It shows that although this Congress may have slumbered in taking steps to provide for the development of water power, that capital and the water-power monopoly have not slept, but have been active, vigilant, and effective in gaining control thereof.

It may not be out of place to show how nonpolitical this water-power question really is. It is not a question for my side of the House to solve, it is not a question for the Republican side of the House to solve, or for the Progressive Party to solve, but it is a question for all of the people to solve. I shall now strive to show you why I make that statement.

If these resources are to be developed, laws must be passed that are reasonably certain and definite, and such as will cause capital to undertake the task. They must, likewise, of course, work hand in hand with conditions that will fully protect the public interest.

TWO KINDS OF WATER POWER.

First, water power developed on the navigable streams of the country more or less interlinked with navigation.

Second, water power developed on the nonnavigable streams where the Federal Government owns the dam site or the public lands over which the rights of way must traverse. The Adamson bill had to do with the former; this bill has to do with the latter.

WATER POWER A PUBLIC UTILITY.

There was a time when water-power development was considered a local, private enterprise in which only the local community was interested and only the local community had to do with its regulation. This theory has long since been exploded, and it is now generally admitted to be a public utility by all.

Mr. Chairman, water power produced from falling water is, to my mind, our greatest natural resource. Unlike coal, oil, gas, wood, and other fuels, it is not consumed by use. It is a subject not too small for our best minds to deal with. It is a subject sufficiently intricate to demand our best attention. Constitutional lawyers and theorists have in the past differed about it and upon it, but the people of the country have been interested in only three things: First, good service; second, what should be paid for that service; and third, what is to be done with the money derived from that service. Up to this time no adequate, well-defined water-power policy has been brought forward and installed. A great and pressing demand for a solution has been present in the country for the last decade. It has been postponed already too long; this Congress should act.

To me, as I scan the growth of electrical energy and the various and multiplying uses of the product, no question coming before Congress has so much reason to expect that our attention will be riveted upon it. The stability of water power and the perpetuity of its blessings and beneficent influences can now be but partially fathomed or understood; we can but await in amazement for it to outstrip our expectations and fondest hopes. Every line that is incorporated in this bill should be analyzed, scanned, and understood by every Member of this House. What we do here is not for a single year, but for a term of 50 years. It is thought necessary to scan carefully the appropriation bills which are but for a single year. This legislation should be scanned 50 times as closely as an annual appropriation bill, due to the tenure of the law. If we make a mistake in an annual appropriation bill it is a mistake for a single year, but if we make a mistake in our water-power policy it is a mistake for 50 years. Hence, though our constituents might through generosity condone our error on an appropriation for a single year, it will require 50 times that generosity to excuse us for an error we make in our water-power policy, which extends for 50 years. The subject is of high importance; the necessity for action is great; further delays are so harmful that I urge with such earnestness as I have at my command that Congress now take up this task and deal with it carefully, painstakingly, effectively, and correctly. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced at the beginning of this session and is identical, save and except a few unimportant committee amendments, with the bill that was considered during the summer of 1914 and which passed the House August 24, 1914. This House at that time passed the bill without any roll call, and while there was some limited opposition to it, it was very small on both sides of the aisle.

The bill this year, as before, receives the hearty indorsement of the present Secretary of the Interior, the indorsement of the ex-Secretary of the Interior, and I may say that it received then and still receives the approval and commendation of the best students of water power in the country.

Last year we held hearings and for weeks and weeks took testimony, to the amount of 771 pages. Bankers and financiers from New York who financed the existing propositions were before us; also water-power people who developed these powers in the West were before us; electrical engineers from all over the United States were before us, giving us the benefit of their experience, of their information, and of their knowledge on the subject. The committee spent weeks and weeks in careful consideration, and brought this same bill into the House in the summer of 1914. It was then considered by the House section by section; every conceivable sort of amendment was offered, and every Member of the House who cared or knew anything about water power came in to present his views. As a result of all that consideration, both in the committee and in the House, the bill in its finally completed form passed without a roll call, and, we may say, practically by unanimous consent.

Prior to 1901 there was no legislation at all on the water-power proposition. There were, I believe, some lax rights-of-way laws which afforded a method of disposing of the lands. Water-power sites worth millions of dollars were patented as a part of the homestead and went to patent under the lax land laws then in existence. On February 15, 1901, 15 years ago, Congress awoke to the fact that the water-power sites of the country were slipping away and that something ought to be done. They passed at that time the so-called revocable permit law, under date of February 15, 1901, and the debates that were had at that time show that Congress intended soon thereafter to pass a suitable and fixed water-power policy. Fifteen years have elapsed and nothing has been done. Each Congress has convened; each Congress has heard the appeals of the Secretary of the Interior and the administrative officers of the Government; each time Congress has heard appeals for a development and conservation of the water power that is going to waste; and each time Congress has turned them away. Congress should no longer neglect the water-power situation in this country. It is a question not too small for the busiest man to think about. It is one of the biggest, burning questions of the country. I repeat that prior to 1901 there was little or no law on the subject. Water-power sites valued at millions of dollars, now being figured in millions, with utility boards fixing the rates, passed into private ownership at $1.25 per acre.

The only other law on the subject is a right-of-way act that was an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill of March 4, 1911, which had mostly for its purpose the development of water power and rights of way on forest reserves.

Of the approximate 28,000,000 potential horsepower known to exist in the United States, only 6,000,000 has been developed, leaving 22,000,000 horsepower in the United States totally undeveloped and for the time being going to waste.

I do not know how the House may feel about it, but some say that we have coal enough to last us an indeterminate period and therefore we should pay no attention to the water power. I deny that that is the correct logic or the correct theory. I deny that any such theory will hold water, because coal used as fuel is totally consumed and can never be used again. It is not so with water power. When water power is used the water is neither despoiled in quality or diminished in quantity, and the falling water making its descent down the mountain side can be used from one turbine wheel to another and later used for irrigation or domestic purposes on its way to the sea.

Some may desire to know why it is that only 6,000,000 water power out of a possible 28,000,000 has been developed. I think it is due to three distinct causes. First, the inefficient and inadequate laws on the subject; second, the control of the market by securing franchises; and third, to the capital that develops water power and the concentration that exists among them which refuses to put any additional capital in for development purposes and thus place in competition additional capital with the capital already invested.

As has been said, the bill provides for a 50-year lease and retains the fee title to the water power in the Government of the United States. A 50-year term seems to be an agreed term. Ex-Secretary Fisher, present Secretary Lane, the forest reserve people, who have had a good deal to do with water power, and water-power engineers, who appeared before us, all were of the opinion that by retaining the fee title in the Government of the United States it would require a term as long as 50 years in order to get proper development and a proper expenditure of money. So I think every member of the committee, and every one who came before us, agreed that the 50-year term was a proper term. Both Secretaries of the Interior, whom I have mentioned, and, in fact, every one for the last 15 years by annual report, by public letter, by public speech and utterance, have urged the Congress to do something, have urged the several Congresses to pass a law that will really develop and protect the water power of the country. I repeat each Congress has heard them and each Congress has turned them away.

Let me leave a few facts with you. Twenty-eight private corporations in the West own more than 50 per cent of the water power developed in the West. Six of those 28 control 56 per cent of the water power themselves. In the State of Montana, and there has been some large development there, one company owns more than 97 per cent of all of the water power developed in that State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee as to how much of this power is developed and how much is under their control in undeveloped power?

Mr. FERRIS. The hearings disclosed that the Montana company owns 97 per cent of all of the developed power in Montana and that they hold almost as much undeveloped holdings in coal storage to head off competition as they have developed.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the instance cited previously by the gentleman respecting the 16 corporations, does that represent developed power or holdings of undeveloped power?

Mr. FERRIS. They represent developed power, although they also have large holdings of undeveloped power. The Utah Water Power Corporation controls over 70 per cent of all of the power developed in Utah, and the same company owns about 30 per cent of all of the power developed in Colorado and 20 per cent of that developed in Idaho. They claim to have and the proofs show that they have large holdings besides that.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman, some time before he finishes, refer to the proviso beginning in line 22, on page 2, and ending in line 8, on page 3, for the purpose of explaining it?

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman does not mind, I would like to take that up under the five-minute rule. I am now just making a few general observations, and I will be glad to take that up with him later, when we reach it in the bill.

I do not mention these things to alarm anybody; I do not mention it to inject any unfairness into the debate, but I merely mention it to show the pressing demand that something be done, so that nineteen or twenty million undeveloped horsepower do not lie idle indefinitely because Congress fails to do the thing which it ought to do—to lay down an adequate, workable water-power policy. The hearings before the Public Lands Committee disclosed that some few estimated that there are 200,000,000 potential horsepower in all the States, but I think that is entirely too high and not borne out by later and more carefully compiled facts.

A specification has been made up by States of where the power is located in the United States, and perhaps the House would like to know where it is. I have incorporated it, but will refer to it partially here. The North Atlantic States have 2,200,000 horsepower, or 7.9 per cent of the total. The South Atlantic States have 2,300,000 horsepower, or 8.2 per cent of the total. The North Central States have 1,700,000 horsepower, or 6 per cent of the total. The South Central States have 1,500,000, or 5.3 per cent of the total. The Western States have 20,400,000 horsepower, or 72.6 per cent of the aggregate.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to inquire of the gentleman, Who measured this horsepower, who ascertained what it is, and whether these figures are entirely reliable?

Mr. FERRIS. The figures are from estimates and information gathered by the Geological Survey, put in form and compiled by the Bureau of Corporations, set forth in their report of 1912, and also from Moody's Manual and from investigations made by the Department of Agriculture, which was directed by congressional resolution to secure the facts.

Mr. KENT. Aided by the Geological Survey?

Mr. FERRIS. And, as suggested by the gentleman from California, aided by the suggestions of the Geological Survey.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The aggregate results of these various investigations are to be found where? In the gentleman's report?

Mr. FERRIS. You can find some of it in our hearings and some of it in our reports, but you can get the first facts on the subject, and the facts from which we get these, from the Geological Survey, in the Interior Department, the Agricultural Department, from Moody's Manual, and from the Bureau of Corporations. I have heretofore incorporated them by tables and they will appear as part of my remarks.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How long has it taken to get these figures?

Mr. FERRIS. The first water power that was ever built, hydroelectric-power plant in the United States, was in 1890.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I mean how long has it been since this investigation began?

Mr. FERRIS. The Geological Survey made a report in 1908, which was the initial information of value. It has been going on for a number of years, but this report was brought up to 1912 by the Bureau of Corporations, and even later compiled, verified, and worked on by Mr. Merrill, the chief engineer of the water-power division of the Forestry Department. The greatest credit should be given these departments for their unstinted work. I, for myself, and my committee make grateful acknowledgement to them for their help on this work.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Can the gentleman give his figures for the State of Alabama separately?

Mr. FERRIS. I had them in the hearings, and I could turn to them and look them up. I have them of every State in the hearings, showing the exact amount of potential water power and the exact development of water power in every State, and, as I said in the beginning, of course the potential horsepower is not fixed. The evidence of one engineer would say that in the State of Alabama there was perhaps a lesser potential horsepower, while another might say there was a greater horsepower. But you can get the best estimate of all potential power and can, of course, be exact as to developed horsepower. I have already inserted the figures the gentleman desires, and they will appear in my remarks.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman's statement and figures quoted are estimates as to the potential horsepower?

Mr. FERRIS. Those I gave just now. That is both the navigable and nonnavigable streams. I want the House at least to get this fact, that 72.6 per cent of all water power, both navigable and nonnavigable streams, is in the western group of States, and in that group of States the general public has 330,000,000 acres of public lands, and 165,000,000 acres in the forest reserves, so it is not a matter of minor importance with which we are dealing. I had called to my attention the other day the controversy which is going on in the city of Portland between the Portland Light & Power Co. and the public utility board, and I find that the unearned increment on their plant was put into the utility board at approximately $11,000,000, a site that probably left the Government at $1.25 an acre. I do not state that figure as a fact. It was obtained under the old law. So it is not too small a question for the best thinkers on either side of the House to give to the question of water power. The Committee on Public Lands, without throwing any bouquets to ourselves, stayed here every day during the holidays, with the exception of Christmas and New Year's Day, in an earnest consideration of this proposition, and that is why we are able to bring to you early in the session at least the result of our best conclusions based on the experience and opinions we could get. It was not a selfish matter; the committee has labored unselfishly and untiringly in the matter. The only law on the subject of water power is the revocable permit law passed 15 years ago, which was only intended as a temporary proposition, and each Congress for the last 15 years has refused to do anything more. The great majority of Congress, I think, has been willing to do it, but they have allowed other matters to press in and push it aside; but that should no longer be done, for this is one of the largest questions with which this Congress can deal.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. For instance, of the 72.6 per cent of available horsepower in the Western States, to how much of that percentage will this bill extend?

Mr. FERRIS. Perhaps I can not give it, but I would say that of the total potential water power in the engineering estimates there are 28,000,000, and of that in the whole United States only 6,000,000 have been developed, leaving from nineteen to twenty-two million that is in existence—that is, the most conservative engineer says that there is in existence nineteen to twenty-two million of water power running to the sea and totally wasted every year, and something ought to be done about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. That hardly answers the inquiry I propounded to the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not intend to evade in any way the gentleman's question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am sure of it. I know that full well. What I desire to ascertain is the extent of the undeveloped or potential horsepower to which this bill will apply.

Mr. FERRIS. The Geological Survey is of the opinion that the following is a fairly correct figure:

The following estimates represent essentially the water-wheel installation that could reasonably be made without extensive storage in 11 Western States using public lands in whole or in part for the emplacement of water-power plants:

	Total horsepower.	Horsepower remaining undeveloped.
Arizona	1,850,000	1,820,000
California	7,500,000	6,770,000
Colorado	1,400,000	1,240,000
Idaho	5,000,000	4,870,000
Montana	2,750,000	2,690,000
Nevada	110,000	108,000
New Mexico	120,000	120,000
Oregon	2,750,000	2,680,000
Utah	800,000	720,000
Washington	6,000,000	5,540,000
Wyoming	650,000	645,000
Approximate total	28,930,000	27,200,000
Horsepower remaining undeveloped	27,200,000
Developed on public land	1,730,000

Of course, in dealing with potentive power figures of different engineers will always be at variance, for it is of course impossible for each measurement to be the same, taking them at different periods of the year when the streams' flow differ. I will say that three-fourths of the 6,000,000 horsepower now developed is on private land and one-fourth of the 6,000,000 now developed is on public land. Of course, this bill is not intended to have to do with navigable streams or streams that properly come under the Board of Engineers in the War Department. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] and the Interstate Commerce Committee brought in a bill last year, and probably will again, dealing with that phase of it. What we are trying to do, gentlemen, is to bring in a bill that will serve the interests of the public and at the same time will get more development of the power sites on the public lands and in the forest reserves in the West that are now lying idle and dormant.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is one matter—I suppose I could look it up as easily as the gentleman, but it is easier for me and the members of the committee if I ask the gentleman——

Mr. FERRIS. I will answer if I can.

Mr. ADAMSON. In regard to the large amount of water power on the public domain, does that consist mostly of small water-power possibilities, or are there many large propositions on the Federal domain?

Mr. FERRIS. I think you will find it is both kinds. Prior to 1901 we allowed water-power sites, dam sites, to go to patent as parts of homesteads. In other words, the qualified homesteader could step up to the land office and say to the register, "I desire to file on the northwest corner of section 32, township 3 north, range 15," and he had the right to file on it. Fourteen months thereafter he had the same right to go back to that same register and pay $1.25 an acre and offer proof of residence and get title to it. So this water-power site, worth millions of dollars, could go to patent and private ownership, beyond control, beyond effective regulation, and without any compensation to the Government or the community other than to the lucky fellow who chanced to acquire it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the gentleman misunderstood my question. I earnestly desire the development of the water power of the United States, because I believe that the prosperity of our country depends more largely on that than on anything else.

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman does.

Mr. ADAMSON. And what I want to know is, and what the members of the committee want to know is, are there many large possibilities on the public domain; are the possible developments mostly small ones?

Mr. FERRIS. I wish to say that Washington City to-day has a number of people trying to get authority to go ahead and improve them, and some of them are large ones. The topography is rough, the falls rapid, and there are both large and small ones.

Mr. ADAMSON. Are they not mostly small possibilities?

Mr. FERRIS. I should say so; but as to horsepower, I should say not. There is 72.6 per cent of the total power in the United States in the 17 Western States.

Mr. ADAMSON. What proportion of the sites?

Mr. FERRIS. I will put in my remarks the status of developed and undeveloped horsepower, and I think it will serve the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am talking about what are not developed. How many undeveloped sites are there on the public domain where could be developed 40,000 or 50,000 horsepower?

Mr. FERRIS. I will put in my remarks by States, so the gentleman can see it. Of course the engineers differ some in totals, but we can get at it pretty closely.

Mr. KENT. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia, I will state that when we talk about our sites representing 40,000 horsepower, or upwards, those are extremely large. I do not believe, from my knowledge of the work of those who have estimated these power sites, that they have taken into account the vast number of small power sites suitable for the domestic needs of a small community or a small group of people. I do not think that the gentleman will find that those are estimated at all, and there are immense numbers of them. When he talks about 40,000 or 50,000 horsepower he is getting into large figures, and I do not think there are many of those on the public lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will my colleague yield? In my recent visit to California my attention was called to a large number of water powers in the Yosemite National Park held by some private companies and not developed. Can the gentleman from California give us some estimate of the undeveloped water powers in his State to which this bill will not apply by reason of their entry under the act of 1901?

Mr. KENT. I can not.

Mr. FERRIS. I will put in my remarks the developed and undeveloped power by States. The measurement will be by horsepower rather than by sites.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In the present state of the science, can the gentleman tell how far water power can be transmitted practically by electricity? Can he tell how far it is being transmitted?

Mr. FERRIS. We have the judgment of the best engineers in the country in these hearings. And, if the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that that is constantly being improved upon by storage batteries. When hydroelectric power was in its infancy it was thought that they could only carry it a short distance. They are constantly enlarging that, and that is one of the very matters that causes engineers to differ as to the total potential power in the country.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is it now? About how much?

Mr. FERRIS. About 300 miles; or, between two and three hundred miles.

Mr. KENT. I wish to say that the original high-potential development occurred in California. The whole thing was based on high voltage, and at the beginning of the development they found that they could successfully economically transmit power 200 miles under very high voltage. They have continually increased the voltage, and therefore decreased the waste, and thereby extended the length of feasible transmission.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I have recently read that the limit was 200 miles.

Mr. KENT. It was more than that.

Mr. FERRIS. Some of the engineers give it as 200 miles, and that was in my mind, but I repeat that that is the very thing that modern science is experimenting with, to halter this power and carry it to where they can use it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. As to Niagara, can the gentleman tell us how far that power is being transmitted?

Mr. FERRIS. I guess it is not transmitted at all on this side, but is being used on the other side. I am not familiar with that. It does not come under the jurisdiction of our committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. On both sides it is being transmitted more than 100 miles.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not the best evidence on that, because we have nothing to do with Niagara. That is being investigated in another committee and is not under our jurisdiction. I do not pretend to know much about power at Niagara.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan how far it is from Niagara Falls to Detroit? I ask him that question because before the Committee on Foreign Affairs it was repeatedly said that a proposition was then pending before the Canadian Parliament to permit a company to get its water power at Niagara Falls in order to supply electricity to run the street cars in the city of Detroit.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Well, I would simply guess that the distance is something like 200 miles across. I do not know the exact distance.

Mr. FERRIS. I think you will find that that is the distance that the engineers say you can carry it successfully. I am informed it is being carried 600 miles in California, but I do not know how practical it is.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I have ridden over it many times.

Mr. FERRIS. One of the questions that we shall have to fight out in committee, and shall probably have to fight out here in the House, is the question of whether or not the Federal Government owning the site and the State owning the water, we have the right to charge for the use of the water in the State. Now, there are many patriotic men in the West, conscientious men, and men of careful thought, who contend that the Federal Government ought not to charge anything because the States admittedly own the water and the Federal Government owns the site, asserting that to charge anything would impose a burden upon the people.

Our committee, I wish to say, has adopted no such view. No department of the Government has adopted any such view. Every department is of opinion that, at least, a sufficient charge ought to be made at the inception of the work to maintain and hold control in the Federal Government, so that the water-power sites may not get away into the hands of private companies which could and probably would oppress the people by extortionate prices. For example, in the State of California, where water-power development has gone on apparently faster than in any other State in the Union, two companies own 57 per cent of the water powers in the State of California. A single water-power company in the State of California furnishes power to a dozen cities for light, for traction lines, and for power.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman stated that two companies owned 57 per cent of the water power in the State of California. Does the gentleman mean the power that has been developed, or the power that is as yet undeveloped?

Mr. FERRIS. I mean 57 per cent of the developed power. It is also true that they own some undeveloped power to protect their investment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have often seen the statement made in regard to water powers in my own State, to the effect that two companies own 75 or 80 per cent of it, or a large proportion of it. They do own that percentage of what has been developed, but that is only a small fraction of what can be developed, which has not yet been developed.

Mr. FERRIS. I have the figures, and I will insert them in the RECORD at the point where I dealt with this subject. The gentleman's question was very timely. The two companies I refer to own 57 per cent of the developed water power in the State of California. They also own a lot more which is undeveloped, which is held in cold storage, so to speak, for the future, for the purpose of beating down competition.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question upon the point that he was discussing before he was interrupted by the gentleman from the State of Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. The gentleman from Oklahoma claims that the Government has the right to charge for its property?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I do.

Mr. ADAMSON. But the gentleman concedes the sovereignty of the State within its territories as to regulation of utilities?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; with regard to charges of royalty in the States, but we expressly disclaim the right to override the State laws in regard to water or the distribution of power where they have a public utility. We also disclaim any intent to override the irrigation laws, or to trample upon the rights of the West in any way; but on the other hand, with equal force we maintain that it is no part of the duty of Congress and no part of the duty of the Federal Government to sit idly by and let a few corporations in a single State control all the Government water powers and thus enable them to charge what they will to consumers to run street car lines, vehicles, to light the streets, and to supply power to homes and industries. It behooves the Congress to see to it that that is not done. Of course, if the property is in private ownership the Government is helpless, but surely we have rights where the power is developed upon Government land.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it contemplated that this control which the Federal Government is to exercise over the water power within States is ever going to get back to the States themselves?

Mr. FERRIS. As to these Government sites, it is not so contemplated, and I would not support this legislation if it did contemplate that. I am not in favor of allowing the power sites that belong to the Federal Government, a subject which is so susceptible to monopoly, ever to pass into the hands of private individuals, whereby they could be used to oppress and torture the people who need light and service at their hands. I do not believe you could get four votes in behalf of that proposition in this House. It has been urged here before and always voted down, irrespective of who urged it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then in that case will not the State become half Commonwealth and half Province?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, that is a thing that we hear on the stump and read about in the newspapers. But what are the facts? The facts are that when you are dealing with power companies you are not dealing with States or States' rights; you are dealing with greedy, thrifty corporations and companies whose net earnings usually reach into the millions every year. I have already incorporated their centralization and earnings in my remarks. If the gentleman will observe them, he will observe they are not so downtrodden.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. May I ask if the gentleman is aware of the fact that a large power plant in the northwest corner of the United States has gone into bankruptcy within the last few weeks? Will not the gentleman admit that it costs something to develop power in most of the States?

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think that good argument? I can cite the gentleman to the names of railroads that are in the hands of receivers. Yet the gentleman would not undertake to claim that because some railroads may get into the hands of receivers for that reason they should all go free of taxes and proper regulation in behalf of the public.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman admit that the States have the right to tax them?

Mr. FERRIS. I admit that the States can tax their own property within their own borders. We do not admit here that they can tax the property of the Federal Government. Now or at any time I would not support a proposition to allow a State to tax Government property. It would be a dangerous and unwarranted proposition.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me again?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not wish to cut the other gentleman off. I am simply trying to get at the facts. I am not going to fight the committee, I can assure the gentleman. I never fight Democratic committees. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's conduct in that respect is better than mine. No one can attack the regularity of the gentleman from Georgia. I usually support them, unless I am sure they are wrong; then I feel it my duty to oppose them.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is so amiable in many other respects that he can afford to commit a good many sins of apostasy of that sort and still stand very high in the councils of his party. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I thank the gentleman for his good-natured wit. Has the gentleman a question which he wishes to propound?

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman made a statement a moment ago when he was interrupted, and I want to understand exactly what the gentleman said. The gentleman was differentiating between what the States owned and what the Government owned, and stated that there was a contention that the Government ought to charge for water.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Did the gentleman say the Government owned the bed of the streams?

Mr. FERRIS. I said that the Federal Government owned the sites.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course the Federal Government owns the banks of the streams. Who did you say owned the bed of the streams?

Mr. FERRIS. In nonnavigable streams, the Federal Government. The State has the right to use the water. It is its water. It is not ours; but the land is ours, and our rights are clear as to our use of them.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman means the nonnavigable streams in the public domain, and that the States own the water?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and I may say that the nightmare and the bugaboo that has always existed between State control and Federal control is largely put at rest by the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Chandler-Dunbar case, which I think decides the question for all time to come. It lays down the rule flat that the Federal Government has the right to do with its own property what it desires to do with it, and the will of Congress is sovereign. It is our property. We own the sites. We can use them. We can prescribe for their use; the latter is all we seek to do here. If I own one farm and my neighbor Jones owns the adjoining farm, I have the right to prescribe how my farm shall be used by my neighbor if he desires to use it at all. If the Federal Government owns a public building or a site in my congressional district, it has the right to control that. If it owns a power site in the district of the gentleman from Georgia, it has a right to control and to regulate that. There can be no question about it, and the courts have so held.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman will recognize a decided distinction between Federal authority over a public building over which it has sovereign jurisdiction, and its proprietary ownership of land subject to the sovereign control of a State as to utilities.

Mr. FERRIS. That has been an argument often advanced, but each time it has been put to rest by the Supreme Court every time it got at the question, and it decided it finally in the Chandler-Dunbar case.

Mr. ADAMSON. I challenge that statement. The Supreme Court has never decided anything of that sort, and in the Chandler-Dunbar case all it decided was the old, well-recognized truth that the Federal Government has supreme control over the beds of navigable streams for navigation purposes, and those purposes only, and that when anybody else gets into that stream he gets in subject to the supreme right of the Government to do everything it desires in the bed of that stream for navigation without accounting to anybody.

Mr. FERRIS. Disputes are not always fruitful or profitable, but I am quite sure this one will be. I ask the Members of the House to read the decision in the Chandler-Dunbar case. Then they can form their own opinion concerning it, which will be better than taking the opinion either of the gentleman from Georgia or myself?

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope they will read it, and I have heard many public speakers make assertions about it who ought to read it and read it thoroughly. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Present company excepted.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I feel safe to rest my whole position on the Chandler-Dunbar case. It is a delightful decision to furnish balm to both sides.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Suppose the gentleman from Oklahoma should insert in his speech his construction of the Chandler-Dunbar case.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suggest in preference that he print the decision.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to printing it. It was presented in the hearings before our committee, and presented at length, and men were there who tried to give it the same meaning which the gentleman from Georgia now tries to give it, and as the result of a month's hearing every member of the committee, I think, with possibly one or two exceptions, agreed with the Supreme Court rather than with the gentleman from Georgia. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 24 minutes remaining.

Mr. FERRIS. I am only going to consume a moment more time. I think the committee has done right in framing section 5, called the recapture clause, and I beg of Members of the House on both sides to read that section carefully.

Section 5, the so-called recapture clause, is the section of the bill that renders this a lease as distinct from a grant in perpetuity. Section 5 is the section that enables us, after the first lessee has had his term out, to get the property back and deal with it free from any claims or fetters or restraints, in the light of 50 years' development.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I hope I may proceed, if the gentleman will pardon me. I think we have laid down the correct principle. The principle in a word is this—I hope the House will get this, because it is important—all nonperishable property, such as land, which increases rapidly in value, shall at the end of the term come back to the Federal Government at actual cost. All perishable property shall come back to the Government at the time the Government takes it over at its fair value. So that in the future, if Seattle, if Portland, if San Francisco, if Los Angeles, if San Diego, or any other city out there decides in the future to own its own light, so that an American home may be lighted for 40 or 50 cents a month as distinguished from four or five dollars a month, the city will not have to pay for a lot of inflated, distorted values in taking back the water power.

I know gentlemen will hold between themselves and the fire some poor pitiful homesteader, and pick his bones to try to inject a sympathic proposition into this, but this is not a homesteader's proposition. It is the largest sort of a proposition that the American Congress will deal with, this question of water power.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I was going to yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], and I yield to him now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question, because this is a subject in which our people are very greatly interested, and I am trying to get the view of the committee upon the question. I have not had time to read the bill as amended. As I understand, this provides that the Government may recapture at the end of 50 years?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; by paying for the property.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In our part of the country we have this water power developed for irrigation uses very largely. Say, at the end of 50 years, there had been an irrigation settlement developed under this water power and that the Government took it over. Suppose they could not agree with the men who had it and they took it over. Would the Government propose to go into the irrigation business and furnish water to the farmers using it—to furnish water to the various companies and private individuals?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, not at all. There is no intention of that sort at all. The gentleman is erecting scarecrows and chasms of trouble that will never materialize.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If that is not true, and the lessees fail to lease it again, what is going to become of it?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman borrows trouble about something that never can happen. The Government does not intend, at the inception or at the close, to interfere with the use of the water for irrigation, or to do anything more than to use some of the proceeds of the project to keep the irrigation going and further develop the project.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As I understand the gentleman's proposition, it is this: I am asking this question because I want to get information. If our people are satisfied that the proposition in this bill is right, they are for it; but here is the proposition we are facing: Take for illustration the water power on the Columbia River. It is developed under the 50-year lease. As a part of that water-power development, there will be irrigation communities consisting of towns, cities, and farms, and at the end of 50 years, when that plant is taken over, what does the Government propose to do? Does it propose to take over and run the irrigation project; and, if not, what are the people going to do if the water is shut off? If you do propose to go into the irrigation proposition and to furnish power for private purposes, where do you get the authority for the General Government to go into the irrigation business? These are questions that I would like to have answered, and I am asking them so that the gentleman may figure it out and answer them in a way that I can support the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. The irrigationists will be in safer hands with their Government than with monopoly, as far as that is concerned. It will not be a question of who can be secured to run the plant, it will be a case of how to get rid of them. The gentleman from Washington raises the question that I supposed would be raised. In the first place, the Government is anxious that at the end of the term, both from the beginning to the end, there shall be no entangling alliances to extend beyond the 50-year term. If the irrigation is under the lessee of the Government, they do it with full knowledge of the fact that at the end of the 50 years Congress is going to step in and assert its full right to do what the interests of the country demand, whether it be little or much for the homesteader or anybody else. The homesteader, the home builder, the irrigationists, and pioneers will appreciate and ask for this legislation as soon as they understand it. I fear it is the power people—already intrenched—who want no competition who scatter the poison.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman has answered the question in the way that I have had it answered before. The question comes up, whether you believe that under those terms you can develop irrigation. Knowing that that is true, do you think they would develop irrigation?

Mr. FERRIS. I am glad the gentleman asks the question, for that is one of the points that I was afraid I should not bring out. The present law is what? It is the revocable-permit law of February 15, 1901, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to revoke a permit without a moment's notice, compensation to permittee, or any other consideration. Instead of that this bill gives them a positive fixed term of 50 years, which will induce capital to come out and develop the balance of the gentleman's sparsely settled country. I may say that there is in this city now, and has been all this winter, a gentleman from the gentleman's own State and city, I think, who is urging this bill with the idea that it will develop the water power in his country. He seems to be a good man and a patriotic man. To be sure, he wants more than I think the House will give him, but he knows what he is talking about, and he is anxious to have this bill passed in order to develop your country. I think it will be a great blessing for the country. I have no doubt that under this law the West will get a great development. The gentleman's question is a proper one. If we are selling a razor that will not shave, you want to know it and Congress wants to know it. Some selfish water-power people who appeared before us said that it would not work; said that they could not develop and could not borrow money under it. But we always hear that said by people when they want to get something from the Government they are not entitled to. These power people, with their spurious State rights claims, have held on to the coat tails of the Government for all these years. But the unbiased, patriotic men that came before us say that they can develop the water power of the country under this bill, and they are anxious to get decent laws passed. I am willing to do all I can for early development. There is nineteen or twenty million potential horsepower lying idle, running from the mountain side to the sea idly, a total waste of that immense power. And the people who own the 6,000,000 horsepower already developed have a monopoly without competition or control. I do not want that condition to prevail. I do not want the Federal Government to sit idly by under lax laws that are not workable and let a monopoly grow up.

Mr. Walter L. Fisher, ex-Secretary of the Interior, in each annual report during his incumbency pleaded for Congress to do something. Secretary Lane in each annual report pleaded with Congress to do something. He has stood in the forefront urging Congress to do something. The President has urged it. Every executive officer who knew anything about conditions has urged it for the last 15 years. Congress has heard them, but has done nothing to remedy it. It is unpardonable neglect to further let the interests of the country wither for want of intelligent action. The bill expressly disclaims any disposition or any intent to interfere with irrigation or to override the State laws or to override the water rights or trample upon your western development in any way. On top of that we provide that the proceeds from the royalty and charges made shall go into the reclamation fund so that your reclamation projects shall not wither and die. What do you want? Do you not want your resources developed? Do you still want to haggle and quibble over an imaginary doctrine called State rights?

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is one question that does not involve a dispute about the Supreme Court. I have not bothered myself much about public-land laws, because the gentleman from Oklahoma has been here and I always went to him for information, and I was willing to take it that way. But the gentleman uses the words "irrigation" and "water power." Does he use them in the same connection?

Mr. FERRIS. How is that?

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman used "irrigation" and "water power" in the same connection a few moments ago. I want to know if he means that all of these large projects ought to be utilized for irrigation rather than hydroelectricity.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, water power is used in irrigation.

Mr. ADAMSON. They are used together?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. On the bald, barren, worthless lands, as bald as the top of the table, if they can get cheap power and pump water out of the earth and out of the streams and put it upon the lands they will convert them into a paradise as distinct from a desert. You only have to go to California, along that strip on the coast, to corroborate that statement.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wanted the gentleman to explain to the committee that fact—that they generate electricity and run a pump with it and then water the land.

Mr. FERRIS. That is it. That is one of the very important uses it has among the small projects. While out in the West this summer we passed over millions of acres of land that are not worth anything as they now stand. We went right over along that little fringe along the coast of California, and we found the most beautiful productive country in the world, but if you step four feet outside of the irrigable area you get into the midst of white sand that would not produce anything. I am trying to get this legislation through so that nineteen or twenty million horsepower of water power may be developed, so that you will not be in the act of irrigating a few acres, but many, many acres instead. I am trying to get this bill through so that you will put something into competition with the centralized water power already in existence so that American homes may be lighted for half what it now costs to light them. I want to furnish power to the irrigator for one-half of what he now has to pay for it, water to the American farmer for half what he has to pay for it now, power to run your traction lines and other vehicles propelled by electricity for a reduced figure; and I believe it will be an everlasting blessing to the West. I fear you westerners are opposed to a law that will help you; you are contending for fee patents, and it is certain you can not get them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Before you get too far away from Seattle——

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, we will wander back there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; let us wander back now. The gentleman mentioned a gentleman some time ago as coming from Seattle; and, of course, the mere fact that he is from Seattle is sufficient guaranty of his standing and reputation. We are both interested in the one particular proposition of whether or not we can develop anything under this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; that is an important question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Of course that is all there is to it.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, not all.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is the most important one.

Mr. FERRIS. Do not go too far afield. I am not willing to give the water-power sites away to get development, and I hope the gentleman is not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. To do what?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman just stated more than he intended to. He stated it was the only question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I said a most important purpose of this bill is to insure the development of the power.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not so sure that it ought to be put that way. It is important.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, it is important. The question I want to ask is this: Did this gentleman, to whom the gentleman has referred, say that he could develop the water power under this bill as it stands?

Mr. FERRIS. With very few modifications, he did; yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was interested in that because I heard this bill discussed for several days at Portland when they had that meeting down there, and we found no one there who had capital or any prospective capital that would do it. What are the few modifications?

Mr. FERRIS. I want to get to that Portland meeting in a moment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to know those modifications.

Mr. FERRIS. He left a marked bill with me.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Are they in the bill now?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I think perhaps some of his ideas were yielded to, but not all of them.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman has referred to the Chandler-Dunbar case.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the opinion of ex-Secretary Fisher, on page 40 of the hearings. It is very brief, just four lines, and it is in response to a question which I put to the Secretary.

Mr. FERRIS. I will not have time to take that up. I will let the gentleman take it up in his own time.

Mr. SINNOTT. I would like to get it into your remarks at this time.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will wait.

Mr. SINNOTT. As the gentleman has called that to our attention.

Mr. FERRIS. I will make the admission that I will stand on any version or construction that Mr. Fisher puts on the Chandler-Dunbar case. That ought to be sufficient to satisfy the gentleman. I do not want a fragment of anyone's position put in my remarks.

Mr. SINNOTT. It is only four lines.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not want the gentleman to inject that in now. I know what Secretary Fisher said. He says that the Chandler-Dunbar case puts an end to this water-power matter once and for all, and he and the gentleman from Oregon do not agree on it at all.

Mr. SINNOTT. Let me read what he said. It is only four lines.

Mr. FERRIS. I decline to yield for that purpose. The gentleman can put it in in his own time. If the gentleman will put it all in, I will be glad to have him do it. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] a moment ago called attention to the fact that out in Portland this summer they held a meeting and that they were all of one mind, and no one favored this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. FERRIS. What was the statement? Let the gentleman make the statement and I will act on it just as he makes it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I said we found no one out there who had any capital to invest who was in favor of it. There were a lot of them out there who were in favor of the bill. The Government sent a number of gentlemen out there who urged the bill, and the departments were represented, and we had some distinguished Senators there who were very much in favor of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I misunderstood the gentleman. I desire to address myself, then, to that part of the convention who are not for it. Those gentlemen who say they want to get the best water-power proposition are a good deal like some of the settlers down in my country. In my country we sell Indian lands to settlers at so much per acre and require them to make homestead entry therefor. Every few months the settlers get together and pass a unanimous resolution that all payments to the Indians ought to be canceled and that they have their land for nothing. It is with that same kind of unanimity they look upon this proposition, and when these water-power people get together it is remarkable with what unanimity they arrive at the conclusion that the Federal Government ought to turn over these water powers for nothing, without charge and without regulation. I hope the gentleman from Washington will not advocate that. I am so sure the Government will do no such thing, no matter who advocates it, and it ought not to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the Federal Government really have this water power to lease?

Mr. FERRIS. They have the sites, without which there could be no power development.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But here is a proposition to take advantage of the Commonwealths and to make portions of them mere provinces; to deliberately choke the Western States into an acceptance of this proposition——

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. I have never observed any legislation that sought to choke the Western States. Every courthouse door in the Union stands ajar, and the gentleman and his friends can enter there and see to it that the Federal Government does not choke him or them. I believe the Federal Government wants to help you, and I believe you gentlemen in a few years will realize that this bill wants to help you rather than to throttle you.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman stand here and say that because the United States Government owns sites adjacent to rivers it proposes to take charge of the water in those rivers which does not belong to the Government?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman does not say that, but says——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does it not mean you are legislating for 11 of the Western States in such a way as to choke——

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all; for the West we have all had the greatest concern and consideration. Most of the Public Lands Committee are, from A to Z, patriotic, good men from the West. They are for the West, and I am with them when they are right, and it is my duty to be against them when they are wrong. I would like to have the people in my State have everything they want. Every county in my district would like to have a public building, and every hamlet there would like to have a public building; but I could not stand here for a moment and advance such a proposition and say that should be done.

Let me add one sentence more, and then I am through. Water power, the use of hydroelectric power, is only 25 years old. The first hydroelectric plant ever built was in 1890 out in Colorado. The law passed on the question of water-power supply 15 years ago is inadequate; it was not sufficient then, and is more inefficient to-day. Every department since then has urged Congress to change it. We have brought in a bill that will correct it. We think it lays down the correct principle. We have brought in a bill which we think will develop the arid West. We have brought in a bill which we think will help the people in every American home who have to use an electric light, to every man who rides on the street cars, to every man who wants the streets lighted cheaply by fair competition, who wants irrigation at a reduced price. Practically the same bill was passed last Congress; let us pass it again that this important matter may not longer be neglected.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves two minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I do not in general debate propose to discuss in great detail the provisions of the pending bill, for such discussion will be more profitable when we come to consider it under the five-minute rule. At this time I shall confine myself to a discussion of the general principles underlying the bill. Some such discussion I believe should be had at this time because of the determined opposition of the officials of some Western States and certain electric-power companies to legislation of this character.

Although the primary purpose of this bill and other bills which will follow it is to unlock the resources upon the public domain in our public-land States and open them to development as rapidly as such resources can be utilized by the public, it must be admitted that there is a very considerable opposition to the bills from the very States which will be benefited by their passage. This opposition I believe can be ascribed to the following causes:

Misrepresentation to the people of the States affected as to the policy of the Government in the handling of its public lands.

Misrepresentation as to the rights of the public-land States in the lands still a part of the national domain.

Erroneous opinions as to the right and power of the Government to deal with its lands in the manner proposed in these bills.

A misunderstanding as to the character of the power sought to be exerted in these bills.

An honest belief by many that we are attempting to interfere with the sovereign rights of States.

I shall discuss these various propositions in the hope that such discussion may be of some aid in arriving at a correct understanding of these bills and in removing some of the opposition, at least, which exists.

Preliminary to such discussion it may be well to state just what policies are proposed in the pending bill:

First. The Secretary of the Interior is empowered to lease to any qualified applicant under the act any of the public lands of the United States, except lands in national parks and military and naval reservations, for a period not longer than 50 years for the purpose of constructing thereon all necessary works for the development and transmission of hydroelectric power.

Second. That at the end of the 50-year term the lease may be renewed under such terms and conditions as may be authorized by then existing applicable laws, or the properties dependent in whole or in part for their usefulness on the continuance of the lease and which may have been acquired by any lessee acting under the provisions of the act, may be taken over by the Government upon payment of the actual cost of lands, water rights, rights of way, and so forth, purchased by the lessee and used in the business, and the reasonable value of all the other property taken over, excluding any franchise value or any other intangible element, or in case the lease is not renewed or the property taken over by the Government a new lease may be made to a third party upon payment by him to the original lessor of the value of the property as above enumerated.

Third. That for the use and occupancy of the lands included in the lease the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to specify in the lease and to collect charges therefor, which charges in all cases when the power is generated upon the lands leased may be measured by the power produced.

Fourth. The gross proceeds from the leases are to be paid into the reclamation fund, and after they have been once used and returned to the fund, as provided by the reclamation act, 50 per cent of the same shall be paid to the State within the boundaries of which the power is developed, to be used by such State for the building of roads or support of its educational institutions.

Fifth. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit entry under applicable land laws upon all lands reserved for water-power purposes in all cases where such purpose will not be materially injured by such entry, upon the condition that all such entries shall be subject to the right of the United States and its lessees to use any part of said lands necessary for water-power development, tranmission, and so forth.

Sixth. The principal remaining features of the bill are those relating to the control of the development and of rates to be charged to the public. I will not enumerate these different provisions now. Generally speaking, however, I will say that every one of these provisions is only such as a private individual would have a right to make in leasing his private property, in the absence of any conflict with State or Federal law, and that question of conflict I shall take up later.

Taking up these various propositions in their order, I assert that every one of them is within the constitutional powers of Congress and in the public interest. The principal opposition is to the policy of leasing these water powers upon the public domain. It is asserted by our opponents that this power does not exist; that while we may possibly have the right to withhold public lands from disposition, we have no right to lease them.

Notwithstanding the assertion of some western gentlemen, this proposition is not even open to argument. The Supreme Court of the United States has settled it in numerous cases. Our power to lease public lands was expressly decided in the case of the United States against Gratiot (14 Pet., 526), which involved the leasing of lead mines upon public lands in Indian Territory. The power was upheld in plainest terms; and from that time to the present, wherever the question was presented to the court—and it has arisen many times in various forms—the power has been upheld.

I will cite only a few of them: In the case of Light against United States (220 U. S. Rep., 536) the Supreme Court said:

> The Nation is an owner and has made Congress the principal agent to dispose of its property.

In Butte City Water Co. against Baker (196 U. S., 126) the court said:

> Congress is the body to which is given the power to determine the conditions upon which the public lands shall be disposed of.

In Camfield against United States (167 U. S., 524) the court said:

> The Government has with respect to its own land the rights of an ordinary proprietor to maintain its possession and prosecute trespassers. It may deal with such lands precisely as an ordinary individual may deal with his farming property.

Again, in Stearns against Minnesota (179 U. S., 243)—

> The United States can prohibit absolutely or fix the terms on which its property may be used; as it can withhold or reserve the land, it can do so indefinitely.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, it is not necessary to refer to the Chandler-Dunbar case which has been discussed this afternoon. That related wholly, as was stated, to navigable streams; but the power of Congress to legislate with reference to its own public lands is expressly settled in the cases that I have cited, irrespective of what the proper construction of the Chandler-Dunbar case may be.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I wondered if the gentleman had found any decision—and I am asking for information on this—defining the meaning of the phrase in our Western States' constitutions and enabling acts preventing a State from interfering with the Government's "primary disposal" of soil? Is there any restrictive meaning attached to the phrase "primary disposal" or the word "primary"? I have not been able to find any decision on that, and I thought that possibly the gentleman might have done so.

Mr. LENROOT. I doubt very much whether there is any decision on it; but it is entirely clear to me that the word "primary" is used in these different enabling acts as meaning that they will not interfere with the jurisdiction of the United States or lay any claim to any of these lands so long as the title remains in the Government. That is what I understand by the meaning of the word "primary."

Mr. SINNOTT. I had in my mind—is there any distinction between the disposal of the soil and the primary disposal of soil or public land? In other words, is the word "primary" used in connection——

Mr. LENROOT. Only for this purpose; it might have been open to the construction that they would claim no control over any land that was owned by the Government at the time the State was admitted into the Union, and therefore the word "primary" was used so as to retain the jurisdiction and right of control upon the part of the State in the public land after the Government had parted with its title.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman if, in his mind, this matter of primary disposal, so called, does not form the foundation of the abstract of title? If the land was disposed of by the Federal Government to the State, is not that the foundation of the abstract of title?

Mr. LENROOT. That is probably true. And further replying to the question of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], I shall refer to the enabling act that he mentions later, but even though I am wrong in any degree with respect to my interpretation of that language, the most that was done in any of those cases was a surrender upon the part of the State to any claim in the public land. But I undertake to say that if there had been none of the ordinances that were enacted by the various Western States at the time they were admitted into the Union, the law would have been exactly the same, because they did not have any title, so far as I know, to surrender, unless it be some of the Spanish land grants to the land within their borders.

It being established that the United States has the right to lease its lands, it follows as a necessary incident that it also has the right to fix the terms of the lease and the rentals to be charged.

At the expiration of the term it has, of course, the right to renew the lease, and it also has the right to lease it to a third party at the end of the term upon the payment to the original lessee of the value of his property in the manner and to the extent that the parties have agreed upon in the making of the lease. It is strenuously contended that the Government would not have the right to take over the property at the end of the term and itself operate it. I shall not attempt to argue that question, because it is unnecessary to do so. No lessee is harmed, if the power does not exist, for his property can not be taken away from him without just compensation, and the provision for the taking over of the property by the Government would merely be inoperative if the power did not exist. It could still renew the lease or lease it to a third party upon paying the lessee for his property.

Granted, then, as it must be, that we have the power to lease, to fix the term and the rentals, the only remaining question of power is as to the various provisions in the bill for the regulation and control of the lessee in his development of power.

The bill provides that provision shall be made for the diligent development and continuous operation of the water power, subject to market conditions; that the lessee shall at no time contract for the delivery to any one consumer of electrical energy in excess of 50 per cent of the total output, except upon the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior; that when the electric power enters into interstate commerce the regulation of rates and control of issue of stocks and bonds shall be vested in the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be provided by Federal statute; that physical combinations of plants or lines may be permitted by the Secretary of the Interior, but forbids monopolies or agreements in restraint of trade; that sale of power shall not be made to a distributing company for a period of longer than 30 days without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior; that no encumbrance or lien shall be placed upon the property without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

That when a State has not provided a commission or other authority having power to regulate rates and service of electrical energy and the issue of stocks and bonds by a lessee, such regulation shall be vested in the Secretary of the Interior or such other body as may be authorized by Federal statute until the State shall provide a commission or authority having this power.

These are the provisions concerning regulation which have so much troubled some of our western friends. They assert we here invade the province of the State and seek to deprive it of its powers. Nothing could be further from the truth. No power is here asserted that a private individual could not insert in a lease of a private water-power site which he owned. We are not here legislating in our capacity as sovereign, but as a proprietor of lands which we own. We authorize the making of a contract, and the lessee enters into contractual relations with the Government, agreeing to do certain things.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman cares to be interrupted or not.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I will permit an interruption.

Mr. MONDELL. He has just made a statement that struck me as being rather extreme. I think his statement was that the Federal Government attempts nothing in this bill that a private owner could not attempt.

Mr. LENROOT. Concerning these provisions for regulation.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is aware that in all of the States to which this applies no power company need do business with the private owner. They can invoke the power of eminent domain and pay for the property.

Mr. LENROOT. What has that to do with the proposition I have stated?

Mr. MONDELL. It limits absolutely any power on the part of a private owner to put any such conditions in a lease.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman does not get my point at all, although he is a very intelligent gentleman. I stated this, and I will put just his case: If a water-power company in the West chooses to deal with a private owner instead of exercising its power of eminent domain over the property belonging to the private owner, that private owner could make that contract with the water-power company and put every proposition in his lease that we propose to put in our lease, and they would be valid in the absence of conflict with State laws.

Mr. MONDELL. I think they would be valid in the lease, but I think the court would set it aside as being contrary to the best public policy.

Mr. LENROOT. What one?

Mr. MONDELL. To allow the owner of a tract of land to make as condition for the use of that tract of land, which might be an important use, the absolute control of the property. In other words, practically confiscate it.

Mr. LENROOT. It is a matter of contract and agreement.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that no such condition would arise by reason of the fact that under our laws the power company, or any user of water for a beneficial purpose, simply proceeds to condemn if he can not make fair terms.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sorry if I can not get the gentleman to grasp the point I am trying to make. The gentleman and others in the West attempt to make the West believe that we are exercising our sovereign capacity to legislate in the making of these provisions, while I am asserting that we are entering into contractual relations with the lessee, and it does not involve legislating in our sovereign capacity at all. For instance, I said the private individual would have the right to make exactly the same kind of a contract, and he would, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming. For instance, A might own a water-power site and in leasing it make a contract with the lessee as one of the terms of the lease that the rates to be charged for the power developed should be fixed by a board until such time as the State government should exercise its power of regulation of such rates. The lease might contain an agreement that the property should not be encumbered without the consent of the lessor, and so of all of the various provisions contained in the bill. We do not undertake to legislate upon these matters in our sovereign capacity but as a proprietor only; but we choose to exercise our power as such proprietor to protect the public interest to the fullest extent possible; but if any of these provisions concerning regulation and control of power wholly within a State should come in any way in conflict with the laws of the State, then I am frank to say that, in my opinion, the law of the State would control, and the provisions, so far as they are in conflict with the State law, will be inoperative and void, and any attempt to enforce such provisions by the Government could be successfully defended against in any court by the lessee by invoking the superior authority of the State law.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman only mentioned one or two of the conditions in the bill. Will the gentleman say that in the case of a private owner he could make and enforce a contract under lease under which it should be provided that though the State had a public service commission and was fixing rates the power of that public service commission would cease and be of no effect if the company ran a wire across a State line? Would that be enforceable.

Mr. LENROOT. That brings up a question that the gentleman is very well aware we have thoroughly thrashed out in this House at different times, with relation to the right to control the issue of stocks and bonds in companies engaged in interstate commerce. It is exactly the same question of attempting to control the issue of stocks and bonds of railroads, and if we have that power, which is strongly asserted by some of the best lawyers in the United States and in this House—although it is denied by others, it is true—and if we have the power in the case of railroads we have the same power in the case of hydroelectric companies when they become engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. MONDELL. Assuming, of course, that the running of a power line across a State line is an act of interstate commerce.

Mr. LENROOT. I would be unwilling to argue this question upon any other assumption, because it is so clear that it is interstate commerce when it crosses a State line that I do not think it is open to argument.

In private leases it not infrequently happens that leases contain provisions perfectly valid when made, but become inoperative through the subsequent enactment of laws based upon the police power of the State.

I now wish to take up the causes of the opposition of many people in the West to this bill—I stated in opening what I believed was the cause of much opposition—deliberate misrepresentation as to the policy of the Government in the handling of its public lands. Last September there was held at Portland, Oreg., a Western States water-power conference. At this conference, participated in by governors and delegates from most of the public-land States, resolutions were adopted which I shall discuss a little later, but I now wish to call attention to some of the speeches made at that conference to show how the policy of the Government is being misrepresented to the people of the West.

Senator SMOOT, of Utah, was one of the delegates to that convention. I shall not indulge in any criticism of the Senator, mindful of the fact that it would be unparliamentary to do so. I shall merely make one or two quotations from his speech at this conference. He said:

> If the Ferris bill should become a law, it would be but the second step in establishing as a Government policy the leasing of the remainder of the public domain. Do you want your children to be tenants of the Government or home-owning citizens.

Again:

> What would our fathers say if they could see the operation of this system by which the free citizens are to be transformed into tenants and permittees of the Federal Government, lorded over and taxed without their consent by prefects sent from Washington.

Senator Thompson, of Oregon (a State senator), said:

> They are tying up our resources by this slow but sure process, the first steps of which is the leasing of water power, and the second step will be the leasing of the rest of the domain and the bottling up of the entire State.

Now, the fact is that instead of tying up the agricultural resources of public-land States and preventing citizens from securing homes, exactly the reverse is true. There is nothing in any legislation now pending, or so far as I know in contemplation by anyone, that by the wildest imagination could be construed as an indication that the policy of the Government was looking toward a citizen tenantry instead of a citizen home owner. Every acre of land withdrawn because of its mineral value is open to homestead entry, and full title passes from the Government to the homesteader except the mineral deposits designated in the withdrawal. It is true that a man can not file a homestead entry for the purpose of securing a coal mine or an oil well, and much as some people would like that to be possible they may as well give up any hope of that character for it never will be permitted.

We hear much about the bottling up of the West, but a very small proportion of what we hear has any foundation in fact. The only possible ground for complaint is in our forest reserves, but that situation is being rapidly improved, for any injustice which may exist lies not in the policy of the law but in the administration of it. But there can be little ground for just complaint even there when we consider the vast areas of land in these public-land States now open for entry under the public-land laws.

I want to call to the attention of my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and those other gentleman who say that the Federal Government has bottled up all the public lands of the West, that the area of the State of Wyoming is in round numbers 62,000,000 acres. On July 1 of last year there were in this State alone nearly 31,000,000 acres of unappropriated, unreserved public lands, or nealy one-half of the area of the State. Utah has an area of 96,000,000 acres. On July 1 it had 31,000,000 acres of public land unreserved and unappropriated. Colorado has an area of 66,000,000 acres. On July 1 last it had over 17,000,000 acres of public land unreserved and unappropriated. I will not take the time to go through the list of all the public-land States, but anyone interested can secure the information by examining the last report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Moreover, the number of homesteads taken has been greater in the last three years than at any other period in the history of the Government. During that period 139,319 homestead entries have been allowed, which is a greater number than had been allowed during any five-year period previous to that time. There were more acres patented last year under homestead entries than there were for the entire seven years from 1868—when the homestead bill was passed—to 1875.

In view of this record it is difficult to conceive how anyone can in good faith make the statement that we propose to reverse the policy of the Government and make the people of the public-land States tenants instead of home owners.

The only thing that we are attempting to reserve Government title to is certain mineral deposits in lands and water-power sites. This very bill now pending provides for homestead entry upon water-power sites, but for agricultural use only. The reservation of use for a water-power site will deprive no man of a home. Men do not build homes on dams. The reservation of minerals deprives no man of a home. Men do not build homes in a coal mine nor in an oil well. We propose to lease nothing that can be utilized for homes. True, we may deprive some citizens of the opportunity to get rich quick through grabbing these valuable sites and mineral deposits, but they are not, as a rule, the struggling pioneer, the man with his little family, seeking a home.

And let me say, in passing, right here, on a point that has been referred to a number of times, that we claim the power under this bill to exact rental in excess of the value of the water-power site. I want to call the attention of this committee to the fact that Secretary Lane, in the hearing before our committee at the last session, cited one instance alone where a hydroelectric company valued its water-power site at $26,000,000.

Another cause for the mistaken sentiment of the West is the misrepresentation indulged in as to the rights of the public-land States to the public lands within their borders.

The fact is that the people of the various States have no right to the public lands within their borders; these lands belong to the people of the United States, not to the people of any particular State, and it is our duty to administer them for the best interests of the people.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman admit that the people residing in those States have a better right to those lands than the people residing in other States who do not care to go there to avail themselves of those opportunities?

Mr. LENROOT. No; but they have the same right to avail themselves of those lands. The man in Massachusetts, for example, has the same right to go to Idaho and enter public land as one of your own citizens has any reason to have.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. He has the same right, of course; but he can not get any benefit from it unless he goes there.

Mr. LENROOT. A citizen of Massachusetts is as free to obtain a homestead in Wyoming as is a citizen of Wyoming. We believe that the public lands should, wherever possible, be devoted to the making of homes, and that such policy is the best for all the people of the United States. It is true that in the Eastern States we have made no distinction between the passing of title of the public lands to secure homes and the passing of title for speculation or for the benefit of monopoly. But because those who have gone before us have been remiss in their duty, have improperly administered their trust, is no reason why we should make the same mistake. But more than that, the people of every one of these public-land States have by solemn ordinance expressly renounced any and all claim to the public lands within their borders—I shall not take the time to cite all of them, but only one or two by way of illustration.

In the constitution of the State of Wyoming, adopted in 1889, is found this language:

> The people inhabiting this State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof.

It is also provided in the constitution that this, together with certain other provisions, shall be irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of Wyoming.

The constitution of the State of Utah, adopted in 1895, provides, in part, as follows:

> The following ordinance shall be irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of this State:
> First. Perfect toleration of religious sentiment is guaranteed. No inhabitant of this State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship, but polygamists or plural marriages are forever prohibited.
> Second. The people inhabiting this State do affirm and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries hereof.

In view of the solemn obligation entered into by the people in the various States at the time those States were admitted into the Union, and in view of the fact that it was made a condition of their admission to the Union, it does not lie well in their mouths at this time and at this day to claim before the Congress of the United States that the lands within the States ought to belong to the people of the States and that they have the right to them. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, much has been said about the right of these public-land States to equality of treatment with the Eastern States. If they mean by that that if 50 years and more ago there was mismanagement of the public domain in the Eastern States such mismanagement should also prevail in the Western States, I can not follow them, nor will that idea be followed by the intelligent, patriotic men of the West. But while they cry out that they are being discriminated against they are asking us to do for them what has never been done for any Eastern States. They have asked Congress to turn over to those States all the public lands within their borders. That has never been done for any Eastern State. In the water-power conference held last September, which I have referred to, they ask Congress to make all public lands subject to the right of eminent domain. That has never been granted to any Eastern State. Others ask that all or the greater portion of the proceeds of public lands be paid to the States in which the lands are situated. That has never been done for any Eastern State. In fact, we are now more liberal to the Western States than we have been to the Eastern States. Until very recently all of the proceeds of public lands with the exception of 5 per cent went into the General Treasury. Now it goes into the reclamation fund, for the benefit of the West. This very bill now pending gives 50 per cent of the proceeds of these leases to the State in which the property is situated as soon as it is repaid into the reclamation fund, after once being used.

Again, some very able men in the West believe that we are attempting to control and appropriate the water in the streams of the West. If there was any foundation for such belief from the language of the bill which passed the House last session, there is none in this bill, for we not only disclaim expressly any interference with water rights which now exist, but we make it clear that the charges to be imposed are rentals for the land used, which, when the power itself is generated upon public land, may be measured by the power produced. Here we exercise the right of a private proprietor to base the charge upon anything they choose, and the only distinction between our proprietorship and that of a private individual is that if it was private property a power company could condemn it under the right of eminent domain, but they can not do so as long as it belongs to the United States.

Much has also been said about the leasing policy depriving the States of taxes. Just the contrary is true. Development under a leasing policy will open up new avenues of taxation. It is well settled in the courts that the States may tax all improvements upon the land that are personal property; they may tax the output of the mine; they may tax the leasehold interest; or they may, through a State income tax, tax the income of the lessees of the Government. This leasing policy will increase the taxation revenues of the State, and, more than that, the entire proceeds from the leased properties go to the development and upbuilding of these public-land States.

Why have we put in this bill provision for the control and regulation of rates and service in certain cases? In the first place, in so far as interstate commerce is concerned, we have the right in our sovereign capacity to regulate those matters, and so long as we do not exercise that right as a sovereign we may do so as a proprietor in the manner provided in this bill. There can be no conflict of authority, then. So far as purely State business is concerned, we only propose to regulate when the State fails to do so. Just as soon as the State acts and regulates them we withdraw by the terms of the bill from the field. Most of the States now have commissions to regulate these corporations, but some have not. The State of Utah is one that has no regulation whatever.

And let me say right here, with respect to the State of Utah, that some of the most determined opposition to this legislation comes from that State, including its governor and other officials. The State of Utah makes no attempt to control any public-service corporation within its boundaries. It has no public utilities commission, and when they ask us to turn over the public lands within the State of Utah to be administered under the State laws they ask us to turn over the public lands of Utah to that great power monopoly which exists in the State of Utah to-day, because under the laws of Utah as they exist to-day that power company could then condemn these very lands under the right of eminent domain.

I have now covered, I believe, the principal provisions of the bill. I sincerely hope that it will become a law at this session. It will open up the resources of the West to legitimate development and prove a blessing to its people. True, a few men will not be able to become enormously wealthy without the investment of any capital through its provisions, but the legitimate capitalist and the honest investor will find security and protection in it. I sincerely hope that the hostility of certain people in the West and of certain water power corporations will not be able to defeat it as they have in the past, but those who are of the belief that if this bill is defeated legislation of the character demanded by the Western Water Power Conference will some day be enacted are very greatly mistaken. The sooner the people of the West realize that the United States will never part with the absolute title to these water-power sites and coal and oil deposits upon the public lands the sooner will these great resources be utilized.

Legislation along the general lines of the pending bill will be enacted, if not at this session then at some time in the future, and if the resources shall remain locked up in the future let it be clearly understood that the people of the public-land States are alone to blame. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TILSON. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's exposition of the bill. Reaching section 15, I find a proviso which, after repealing laws in conflict with this act, provides that the provisions of the act of February 15, 1901, shall continue in full force and effect as to lands within the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Parks in the State of California. I ask why that exception is made?

Mr. LENROOT. Because we exclude these parks from the terms of the bill.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; that is just the question. Why are these excluded when other parks and other public lands are not excluded?

Mr. MANN. The House did it last year.

Mr. LENROOT. The House itself did it. It was done upon the floor of Congress. They desired some legislation in reference to it, and accordingly the bill of 1901 was left to apply.

Now, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] reserves the balance of his time, 13 minutes. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat amused at the attitude of certain people from the West. They pretend to speak for all the West. I think I can speak for a little of the West myself. I was the first man in the State of Nevada as a landowner and a stockman to fight for the enlightened policy of leases or permits on the forests. To-day the State of Nevada is unanimously in favor of the preservation of those forests, although they may have no trees in them. My district in California contains nearly 40,000 square miles and has in it vast areas of public domain in and out of the forest reserves. I hear no word of State sovereignty or Federal oppression from my 90,000 voting constituents.

I am amused at the attitude of some other gentlemen, including one gentleman who is particularly hostile to the idea of the public control of anything, who came before the Committee on the Public Lands and asked for a municipal coal mine for the city of Grand Junction, Colo.—a piece of socialism that we conservationists had never thought of forcing upon the State of Colorado. We granted him his municipal coal mine and blessed him for his idea. I for one urged an appropriation to make good the depleted tax roll of his State. [Laughter.] Now, a gentleman in another body has been particularly hostile——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. When it is understood that we have something like 9,000,000 acres of coal in the State of Colorado which is being held up and not used and is withdrawn from entry, does the gentleman think it is socialism or otherwise than good citizenship to give relief to the cities which are now paying $6.50 for coal when they paid $2 before?

Mr. KENT. I can not allow the gentleman to take up my time by making a speech. I am not afraid of being called a Socialist; the Socialists honored me by giving me their nomination in the last election.

Another gentleman from Colorado who occupies a seat in another body that is unfit to mention in this House under the rules of this House [laughter] came before us and said he wanted a public park in the State of Colorado.

We said, "Splendid. We will give the State of Colorado this mountain park."

He said, "We do not want a Colorado park; we want a Federal park." And before he finished his argument he admitted that he disliked bureaucratic control, but loved bureaucratic appropriations. And we shall find that running through the whole plea of State rights in this House that the people who make the loudest clamor for State rights are the first people who come in and call loudest upon Uncle Sam for help.

Now, when they talk about alienating these lands to the several States, while I have no time to go into detail, I can mention a few cases where States have been more recalcitrant in the performance of their duty than has the Federal Government. The State of California had been granted by the Federal Government the swamp and overflow lands in the Sacramento Valley. The State sold these lands at $1.25 an acre under the proviso, I believe, that $2.50 should be paid for their reclamation. Not one thing has ever been done or a dollar spent, and those lands are in private ownership and will be made worth two or three hundred dollars an acre when an adequate system of improvement is adopted, largely at State expense.

The Federal Government gave to the State of Nevada 3,000,000 acres, and Nevada permitted the location of those acres wherever the purchaser wished, in blocks as small as 40 acres. The State of Nevada gave those lands in any quantity, from 40 acres up, to anyone who wanted them. The result has been that most of the water in the State of Nevada has been taken over; that most of the springs are in private and exclusive ownership by those who acted with the full authority of the State of Nevada. That is the way the State of Nevada has been skinned and skimmed.

Now, when we talk about this horrible policy of tenancy and leasing, I want to bring to your attention the fact that the State of Wyoming grants grazing leases, a thing that is more abhorred by our gentleman from Wyoming than any other crime against nature and the Constitution in all the long list of conservation sins which he so verbosely decries than any other possible conservation suggestion. The State of Texas also grants grazing leases.

And now a word about what we ought to do with some of our water power in the public domain. The water power in the forest reserves is under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture. A gentleman from Alabama, now a member of a body unfit for our consideration, shed many tears on the floor of this House over the fact that the water powers of his State might be utilized for extracting nitrogen from the air and thereby fertilizing the fields of his State, and that they were not developed simply because we insisted upon control. I asked this gentleman from Alabama to state, if the proposed grantees should be permitted to use these water powers to extract nitrogen from the air, to make cyanamid or other chemical fertilizer, what price would they ask. He admitted that it would be just a trifle below the Chilean price of nitrates, and the people who manufactured that cyanamid in Alabama would pray the Lord, and possibly lobby in Chile, to have the export taxes of Chile raised so that they could make a larger margin of profit.

I should like to see the time come when the Agricultural Department, either through agencies under lease, or directly, would manufacture this needed fertilizer and serve it out to a barren country at what it costs the Government, plus a profit if it were done through an agency. We can use these water powers in a thousand different ways for the public welfare if we merely hold our grip on them until we can make proper terms. Men have come to this House and asked the privilege of accepting our terms, and thereafter of investing immense sums of money in the production of hydroelectric energy. Their efforts have been blocked simply because of what is called "the danger of a bad precedent." Before I became a member of the city council of Chicago, I applied, through my friend MANN, then an honored alderman from my ward, for the privilege of putting pipes under the streets to connect up three of my buildings, so that I would need only one steam plant and one electric plant. As a matter of common decency and justice I offered to pay rental for the privilege to the city of Chicago. The matter was referred to the committee on streets and alleys South. Hon. Bathhouse John Coughlin was chairman of that committee, and he finally told my friend MANN, "JIM, I will do it for you; but I don't do it for no money for leases to be paid the city; that is a bad precedent." [Laughter.] He was capable of frankly adding that the aldermen needed the money more than did the city.

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 4 minutes of his 10 minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEFLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 1773. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Kermit, W. Va.; and

S. J. Res. 62. Joint resolution extending the time for filing the final report of the Joint Committee of Congress to Investigate Rural Credits.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT AND USE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado and Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that I am going to take only a moment or two at this time. I expect to briefly discuss the leasing proposition generally on the succeeding bill—the coal bill—rather than on this water-power measure. I have prepared a minority report on the coal bill (H. R. 406), and I contemplate going somewhat into the details of the policy at that time; but there are one or two things to which I wish to call attention at this time.

It has been very vigorously proclaimed here that the West needs unlocking and that our development is at a standstill. To a certain extent that is true, for this reason: We have now only the right-of-way temporary-permit law for the development of water power. Capital can not and will not invest under a temporary permit revocable at the whim of some petty Government official. The water-power sites of the West are withdrawn from private entry, and as long as the Government follows that policy and refuses to grant to anybody the ownership of the sites or a permanent tenure for the development of water power, of course there will be little or no development of water power. If the Interior Department would revoke those withdrawals and grant permanent rights of way upon and under express conditions preventing monopoly and reserving the right to regulate charges, rates, and service whenever the State public-utility commissions do not properly perform that service, there would be as much water-power development as there is any demand for. I think many of our power companies are in the hands of a receiver now.

Reference has been made by the last speaker to our coal situation.

The coal lands of the West have for several years been withdrawn from entry, and where they have been classified they have been valued so high that nobody will or can buy them. The result of that has been to enhance enormously the value of the private coal holdings. It has given the coal companies a Government-made monopoly that no other power on earth could have given them, and it has permitted them to raise the price of coal from $2.50 a ton to $6.50 and make millions of dollars off of the consumers by reason of this conservation policy. That is conservation of the people's money in the pockets of the large coal companies.

If it is true that the water-power companies have very largely gone into combinations, it is also true that nearly all the Western States are adopting efficient public-utility laws that are regulating the prices and service, and it does seem to me that in the end the regulation of the rates and the charges and the service and all those things pertaining to power and the use of coal and fuel generally and light are going to be in the hands of a public-utility commission of the States; and if the States do not perform their duties, the Federal Government would be justified in reserving the right to do so.

Let me say this in behalf of the governors of the Western States that have been referred to: For the past four or five years they have held meetings, at which they have discussed these subjects, and they have repeatedly said they were opposed to any monopoly or waste and do not object to any reasonable regulation, so far as preventing monopoly, waste, or extortion is concerned, or so far as regulating rates and service by public utility commissions. They object on principle to this permanent withdrawal and Federal leasing policy. They vigorously insist that it is not right or fair to our Western States.

What the West objects to in a nutshell is this: We insist, first, that our States were admitted into the Union on the same terms and conditions as the other States and have the same rights that the older States have. None of the property within your States has ever been withheld from private ownership and taxed for the benefit of the Federal Treasury. You have no right to prevent our resources from going into private ownership and going onto our tax roll to help support our State and county governments; second, the West is poor; you have no right to tax the West to support the East; and, third, you have no right to control our local domestic affairs by sending Federal employees from Washington out there to regulate us. We do not like bureaucratic control. We do not like long-distance government. That is what we object to. We object to our States being treated and exploited as Federal provinces. We believe our commonwealths are sovereign States, and that we have the public spirit and intelligence and as much right to control the resources in our State as you have in your State. Because, forsooth, you have the power on the floor of this House and in the Senate to pass this bill and to regulate our local affairs, we do not concede that that gives you any moral, equitable, legal, or constitutional right to do so.

Of course our people want development, and some of them are willing to accept almost anything that gives any hope of development. But Colorado has never yet instructed or authorized me to surrender her birthright for a mess of pottage. I hope this bill may bring about water-power development and benefit the people, but I do not believe it will.

Talk as you please about taxes where property is held by the Government, we can not tax it. Why should we be compelled to support our State government by taxing only a part of our lands and part of our people? We have as many State institutions as you have, and only about one-quarter or one-third of the territory of our Commonwealth to tax. Why should we allow all this valuable property to be forever withheld by the Government of the United States, and we be prevented from putting any taxation upon it for the support of our schools, our State government, our county government, our courts, our roads, and the development of our country generally?

As a matter of fact, we must go down into our pockets and foot the bills for maintaining the State and county governments and the courts that administer the laws that protect your Federal officials that you see fit to put upon us. We must maintain the schools and build the roads the Government agents use. The whole Federal leasing proposition is absolutely unfair and an outrage upon the West. It is exploiting us as a Federal province or insular possession that we object to. This has never been done or attempted before in the history of this Government, and we are emphatically opposed to this un-American policy. That is the plain proposition. Because you have the power, because there are coal mines and water-power sites on our territory, you say we will hold them in Government ownership, put taxes upon them as we see fit, and use the taxes where we see fit. You say that you are giving the funds temporarily to reclamation service. Of course, that is a benefit to the West. The funds will be used in that fund for from 20 to 30 years and then one-half go into the Federal Treasury and one-half into the State treasury; and yet I fear there is not a man on the floor of this House who will ever see one dollar of it go into the State treasury. It is now that we need the money. It is this generation which needs the taxes. We need more than royalties. We need the taxes on these resources to build roads, to support schools, and to develop the country. It is not the next generation; the next generation will take care of itself. It is the present poor and undeveloped West that needs your encouragement, rather than being deprived of our resources and being taxed and penalized and governed by Federal employees, because we have not the power to prevent it. That is the position we are in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is there any provision made for the identification of the money that goes into the reclamation fund?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; nobody can tag the dollars that goes into that fund. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss this matter further in detail, but, as I said before, I will take it up at length when the coal bill comes up.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If the money going into the reclamation fund can not be tagged, does not the gentleman think that the State will get one-half of all that is paid in?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I hope so; but I do not believe that any one of us here will ever live long enough to see a dollar of it get into the State treasury. At least, I fear not.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the State of Illinois ought to have had one-half of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands of that State?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The State of Illinois has got all her land in private ownership and on the tax roll.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not answer the question. I ask him whether he thinks the State of Illinois ought to have had one-half given to it by the General Government of the proceeds of the sale of all the lands of that State?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is not a parallel question. We are willing, after it is used once in the reclamation fund, to give the Federal Government all the proceeds of the sale of our lands. The money will, of course, then go into the Federal Treasury the same as the funds did from the sale of the Illinois lands. But that is not a drop in the bucket compared with the amount we lose in taxes by the land being perpetually withheld from private ownership.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not answered the question, but the question itself is a complete answer to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FLOOD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the following title:

H. R. 3681. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Tulsa, Okla.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had approved the following Senate joint resolutions and bill:

On December 17, 1915:

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes.

On December 18, 1915:

S. J. Res. 56. Joint resolution extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States.

S. 696. An act authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT AND USE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, before I begin the discussion of the provisions of the bill I want to pay a little attention to the artistic straw man skillfully constructed and decorated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], after which he proceeded very adroitly to spar with the straw man and pierce him through. His straw man was his assumption that the people of the West believe that they own the lands within the borders of their States, or have a superior claim upon them. I have lived in the West a long time and I have never heard any such claim asserted by anybody. What the people of the West believe, and what the people of all of the Union wherever there was public land have always believed, is, first, that each of the States of the Union came into the Union on an equality with the other States, and whenever anything is done or attempted to be done which destroys or disturbs that equality it is our duty to resist it on behalf of our own people and for the good of the country as a whole. We further believe, as the Supreme Court has in substance declared, that the Federal Government is the proprietor of the public domain, in trust for all the people. We believe that the man who has the highest right to the public domain is the man from any part of the Union who takes the trouble to go to the public land and take upon himself the privations and hardships necessary to reduce that land to a useful and habitable condition. As that man, and others like him, becomes a resident of a public-land State when he does those things, it is true to that extent that he and all citizens so situated have a superior claim to the part of the public land to which they attach their claim, and to the proper use of the adjacent lands.

Their claim is certainly superior to that of the man who, resting comfortably under his vine and fig tree back East somewhere, does not do the things or undergo the hardships necessary to make the public domain habitable, useful, and valuable. We are not standing on any foolish claim that we own or have a superior claim to the public lands, but we stand as the defender of the rights of those already on the ground and those who shall some time come to assert and affix their personal rights to the public domain, or to certain portions of it, under the laws of the land, even as our people have done from the foundation of the Government. The position we take is the position that has always been taken by those who from Ohio west have attempted in the new States to maintain that equality of condition and opportunity guaranteed by the Constitution and enjoyed by the citizens of older States.

I am against this bill because I am against the principles, or lack of principles, that lie at the foundation of it, and I am against it for those reasons.

It is not by the consolidation or concentration of powers but by their distribution that good government is effected. Were not this great country already divided into States, that division must be made, that each might do for itself what concerns itself directly and what it can so much better do than a distant authority. Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want bread.

Those are the words of Thomas Jefferson. I am also against it for these reasons:

The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution are few and defined. Those which remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects as war, peace, negotiations, foreign commerce—with which last the power of taxation will for the most part be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all of the business which in the ordinary course of affairs concerns the lives, liberties, and properties of the people, the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the States.

Those are the words of another great Democrat, James Madison.

These two declarations, if they are accepted as a proper rule and guide, condemn this bill and every feature and factor of it. Let us see what it is. It affects only States where there are public lands. Therefore it affects now about 16. It affects to a considerable extent only about eight—the Mountain and Coast States. It affects within those States only such water-power development as must use some part of the public lands, either for the power plant or some part of it or for the carrying of a transmission line. It is, therefore, sectional as to the States it affects. It establishes different conditions even within those States as between powers which may be located side by side, the one wholly or partly on public land or wholly on private land but perchance running a transmission line across a narrow strip of public land, the other wholly on private land. On those power plants which are affected it proposes to lay a tax, not based in any way on the value of the Government property used, but based on the total productive capacity of the plant. To illustrate, a plant producing ten, twenty, thirty, forty thousand horsepower may be located entirely upon private land, no part of its plant on or near public land; but in sending a transmission line across the country, 10, 20, 30, or 40 miles away, it may be necessary that the line cross a narrow strip of public land, possibly a quarter of a mile in width, and immediately forthwith and thereupon the Secretary of the Interior or some clerk of his, under his authority, may levy and assess such charges as he in his wisdom, or lack of wisdom, may desire to do, based on the entire horsepower development of that great plant. The tract of public land crossed may not be worth $5. The use of it by a transmission line may in no wise affect its use for other purposes, and yet the very fact that the line crosses it makes it possible to assess a sum against that power plant that may run into tens of thousands of dollars per annum.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman aware that under an amendment of the committee printed in the bill that condition of affairs could not arise, because no such authority is granted the Secretary to charge for water power unless some part of the power is generated on the land used?

Mr. MONDELL. Whereabouts is that?

Mr. LENROOT. On page 7.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee, that being the case, has had some little eleventh-hour conversion that might well have come long, long ago, because this same committee, or another committee having the same title, assured us a year ago that this bill was absolutely perfect in all respects; and when I presumed to make a few remarks relative to it I came very near being accused of being an undesirable citizen.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MANN. I notice section 8 and a committee amendment, and I can not see myself how it makes very much distinction in the bill, but the original bill as it passed the House only authorized specific charges for power developed and sold or used.

Mr. MONDELL. Sold or used.

Mr. MANN. That was charged for the power developed and sold or used; development, sale, or use.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad the gentlemen who have been supporting this measure are now reaching a point where they are entering their pleas in confession and avoidance.

Mr. MANN. Do not include me in that class. I think the Government ought to have control where the lines may run way above the ground, where the wire does not strike the ground at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me say this: I have not had time to carefully investigate the amendment to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers, but, looking at it hurriedly, I doubt if it will change the character of the legislation, and I am still of the opinion that the bill as it will be administered will have exactly the effect that all of its sponsors have heretofore up to this good hour claimed it would have, to wit, that all that was necessary to do to trap one of these power companies, no matter how enormous were its holdings elsewhere, was to have a little public land reserved somewhere which it must pass a power line over, and I am still inclined to the opinion that that is true. If it were not true, why are we reserving a lot of these so-called power sites? Some of them are not so located that anyone will ever build a dam or power plant upon them, because the land adjacent to the stream on which the dam would be built, which the waters would flood, on which the plant would be builded, have long since and years ago passed into private ownership. So-called power sites have been reserved which consist of strips of land lying back of the streams so situated that it is impossible to develop power along the stream without some minor work connected with the plant passing over the land, or a conduit or pole line to carry the current to the customers of the company.

Now, if it be true that the committee has entirely about-faced and the Secretary of the Interior has entirely changed his mind and that the only plants to which this law applies are those that actually have their works builded on public land, then there is no special reason why our friends the extreme conservationists should particularly plume themselves over this legislation.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Because in that event it will only affect a few plants outside of those that may be located on the forest reserves; few plants, in my opinion.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman did not understand me to say that the bill now relates only to public lands upon which power is developed. What I did say was that the charge based upon power developed will only be made where the power is developed upon public land. In the case of a transmission line the charge will not be made on the power developed and is not, in fact, being sold to-day by the department, but based upon a mileage basis.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, there may be some amendment recently adopted since I was before the committee that will effect these changes, but from a hurried reading of these amendments I am still inclined to think that the bill is not materially different now from what it was last year. What has been claimed for it all the time? Its most enthusiastic friends have been particularly enthusiastic about it because it was a sort of water-power catchall, under which, by retaining large acreages, sometimes in narrow strips, in public ownership it would be possible to trap water development, and by so doing be able to lay a charge upon the development measured by the water-power development on plants scores or perhaps hundreds of miles away and located on private land.

But it has only one objection. Taxation is bad enough, heaven knows, when it is inequitable and inequitably burdensome, but there are even worse things than taxation in this world. One of them is the denial of those principles on which the Government, which you have sworn to defend, is based; and if this bill does not run squarely contrary to the Constitution of the United States then there must be some devious winding pathway through that ancient instrument which up to this time no one has been able to find. This masquerades as a bill to lease the public domain for water-power development. To a fair proposition of that kind I have no serious objection. Though I have very strong views about the limitations of the Federal Government's control and ownership of public lands, I am not one of those who believe that the Federal Government is without authority to lease its lands. I have come to that conclusion with a good deal of hesitation and some misgivings. I still have some fear of its effect on the Republic, on the States and their citizens, not in their business life so much as in their political affairs and relations.

If all that was involved in this bill was the matter of making a reasonable charge for the use of the public lands for power development, I should not particularly object. I should not seriously object if the charge were a considerable one considering the value of the lands so used. I should want it based and bottomed on the value of the property, and, of course, it ought not to be unreasonable, the value of the property considered.

But that is not this bill. That is what it pretends to be, but that is not what it is. It is a measure that, assuming a right on the part of the Federal Government to lease its lands rather than sell them, further assumes that, having done that, the Federal Government can do a great variety of things in the way of taxing and controlling domestic corporations which, if done, does not leave the States in which it is done or their citizens in a position or condition or equality with the balance of the Union.

Now, I am a believer in local self-government, sometimes called State rights. I think that Brother Bartlett, of Georgia, before he left us said that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was, after himself, the next best Democrat, from the viewpoint of preserving the rights of the people to control their affairs, on the floor, and he named me as third. But I am not so insistent about State rights that I would quarrel with any provision that went to the limit of the Federal power up to the point of encroachment upon the rights of the State if it were entirely clear that no harm could come to the country by so doing and it was necessary for the public good. Harm will come, however, when you attempt by statute to disturb the equilibrium, the poise, the balance, the division of powers as between the people and the States. I still believe with the famous Democrat whom I quoted a few moments ago that the best way to have good government is to leave local affairs with the people. I know that there are a lot of folks who feel differently. The curious thing about it is——

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that about woman suffrage? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the gentleman thinks that about woman suffrage. The gentleman thinks, of course, that each of the States, of and by itself, should give women the right to vote and would benefit thereby. The gentleman also believes that the Constitution very clearly provides a way whereby the States can determine the matter through a constitutional amendment, and therefore it is entirely proper to invoke that method under the Constitution, in accordance with the Constitution, to bring about this great good, which, if accomplished, would settle a lot of these things that now trouble us.

When, however, you proceed on the theory that nothing but the salt of Federal control will save a people locally, you have by that token indicated your lack of confidence in the principles on which our fathers founded this Government. If the people of the States of this Union are not competent, if they are not disposed to, if they will not regulate and control and protect themselves against their own domestic corporations, no salt of Federal control exercised in a pump-handle way from Washington will ever save them. [Applause.] That applies not only to this bill, but to a great many things that are proposed here.

There seems to be great fear in certain quarters that the people of some States will not prove capable of self-government, and our attention is drawn to the fact that the State of Utah has not a public-service commission. I think it is the only Western State that has not. I assume it is due to the fact that up to this time the public-service corporations have been treating the people there so well as to rates and charges that they have not considered it was necessary to have further regulation. We did not have a public-service commission in my State until last year. But I pay no more for electric energy in a little town of 1,200 people in northern Wyoming than I pay in the Capital of the Nation, under Federal control and jurisdiction. [Applause.]

Not only does this bill burden the people through the ownership of public land, but through the medium of that ownership it attempts to set aside under certain conditions the sovereign power of communities to say what they will pay for their electric current. Assume a considerable power plant in the northern part of my State furnishing the current to light a very considerable little city and to run the street railway. Assume this is done at a rate less than we pay here under Federal jurisdiction and control. Assume that this plant and all its lines and property are on private land. Under this bill if it extended its line across the State border, particularly if in doing so it crossed a little public land, neither the county commissioners of the county nor the city council of the city nor the public-utility commission of the State of Wyoming would have anything to say about the rates or practices of that plant. But down here in the Interior Department would be a clerk, who perhaps had never gotten beyond the Potomac or across Rock Creek, and therefore was fully informed, who would proceed to say how the people should be served by that company and under what terms and conditions they should pay for that service.

Now, that may be good legislation in the minds of some folks. If I were a rampant, raging Federalist, who believed that bureaucracy was the acme of perfection in human government, and that centralization was the cure of all evils, I would be for that very thing, and I would want to vote for this bill.

I want to suggest to some of the brethren who do not live in the region to which this applies, that if we adopt this principle in the West, of course it must be applied to all the development on the navigable streams throughout the country, for surely there is no one here who would say that what is sauce for the western goose should not be sauce for the Middle and Eastern States' gander. If it is right that the Government shall, through some attenuated theory, control, tax, and eventually own, as is contemplated by this bill, water powers of the country; if that is the idea that appeals to us, then, of course, we should have it, not only on this bill, but on a bill to come in a little later, relating to the navigable streams.

I have said that this bill applies only to certain States. The people of those States have been accused of being selfish in demanding things that no one else has demanded or secured. I deny that. But the western people have been a unit, practically, speaking through their governors and speaking through their representatives at meetings in Denver, Salt Lake, Portland, and elsewhere, in their opposition to the principles of this bill.

In so doing they believe they are standing not only for their rights—bless you, no—but standing also for the right of American Commonwealths to remain on an equality each with the other. In their attitude against special taxation and bureaucratic control the western people think they are defending the rights of all of those who may come from Massachusetts or from North or South Carolina or from Mississippi or New York to those new States to find there opportunities under conditions familiar to them, in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, and not conditions applied as though, as the gentleman from Colorado says, the West were a Federal province.

We believe in sane conservation; we believe in the development of our resources in a way to make them most serviceable in the public interest. We believe in preventing waste, and above all things I want to impress this on you, that we of the West believe in the public control of water-power development. If there is any place on earth where that control has been denied or shall be denied, it can not be in the States to which this bill applies. Here in the East you adopted the common-law rule of riparian rights, and under that rule I understand there are conditions under which those using water power to generate electricity have been disposed to question the complete control of the public over all matters of operation, rates, and charges.

That may be true in the land of riparian rights. But this bill refers to the land of appropriation. The very basic principle of our law relative to the use of water is that the water belongs to the people, that no right to water can be acquired by anyone at any time, except the right to use it for a beneficial purpose, at a given place, for a certain purpose. [Applause.] And over that use the public, owning the water, has absolute and unquestioned control. So that if there be any place in the country where it is necessary for the strong arm of the Federal Government to be stretched forth because of a denial of the right of the people to control, it can not be in the States of water appropriation, where no one has ever questioned and no one ever will question the right of the community absolutely to control in every way all uses of water.

A good deal has been said at one time and another—more formerly than now, although we hear the echoes to-day—of great monopolies, great concentration of water-power development. It is true water-power development is a monopoly, a natural monopoly, and the tendency is toward concentration; and the curious thing about it is that the concentration movement, which was used to scare the people into belief in this kind of legislation is a movement now applauded and approved by the promoters of the legislation. Gentlemen and conservationists so celebrated as Mr. Pinchot and the Director of the Geological Survey, Mr. George Otis Smith, now call attention to this tendency to concentration to approve it. This very bill provides for it, because, they say, only by concentration, so that the current can be used freely over a large area, can there be the widest and most continuous use, and therefore the lowest rates. And so the argument with which all this began has been dropped and their bogey man, raised by the ultra-conservationists, has, as they become familiar with it, been embraced by them as one of the cardinal tenets of their faith.

Of course the power companies will concentrate. At least they will have arrangements under which they can distribute current over wide areas, and there is no objection to that. It is the best thing to do, provided always that there is absolute, unquestioned, complete public control, such as exists in the States to which this law is proposed and expected to apply.

But it has been said, "You gentlemen should not complain. We are relieving you from an intolerable situation, and it really is not fair and decent of you to complain about it when we are in fact giving you an opportunity to develop your resources."

Well, assuming that our resources are tied up, how did it happen? Mostly the same gentlemen who have been most active in advocating this kind of legislation are those who tied them up or applauded the tying. They appeared before committees away back yonder in 1901, coerced Congress into giving a revocable permit for power development rather than a permanent easement, such as we had granted to other classes of water development. They have since been taking advantage of every law and every lack of law, as one Secretary of the Interior put it, to make it more difficult to secure opportunities for development. A certain distinguished Secretary of the Interior just as he was going out of office, without giving any reason or excuse for it, so far as I now recall, revoked out of hand the rights of some 25 or 30 power companies, many of which had spent large sums of money in development. Some of them, probably most of them, were complying with every requirement of the department. Of course, after that was done the people became suspicious of the temporary permit, and water companies did not like to embark upon enterprises under a law which gave so little security.

Then came water-power withdrawals, withdrawing not generally, as the public has imagined, marvelously valuable sites, where dams can be built and waters impounded and wheels made to turn, but frequently strips or areas of rough land lying along the streams, where the power development may be caught in this Federal trap as they pass their power lines from the stream into the country where they have their market. And between these two conditions—the fear, since the cancellation of the permits by Secretary Garfield without rhyme or reason, so far as I know, and the withdrawals—it has been difficult to develop on or near the public domain. Therefore they say, "Behold, we bring you this opportunity for development."

Well, if this were the only way in which the West could ever be developed, some would embrace it; some have, in despair of other relief; but other and adequate relief can be easily, safely, and properly given.

The situation is entirely simple. There is no difficulty about it. All that it is necessary to do is to reenact the right-of-way act of 1891, so amended as to include within its terms the right of way for water for the generation of power. I have taken the trouble to draft such a bill. I did this some years ago. It slumbers in the room of the Committee on Public Lands. The bill contains, among others, a provision that every grant of a right of way should be subject to the condition that if the right of the State to supervise and control in every way were denied or contested, it would work a forfeiture of the grant.

If that is done there can be no question as to the power of the State to control under such a right-of-way act. There would still remain in the minds of some misgivings as to whether the people of the State will protect themselves—the view that they must have the saving arm of the Federal Government. If that is the view, in Heaven's name let us not stop at this legislation. Let us go the length, all along the line, and by some hocus-pocus, by some maneuvering, get around the Federal Constitution so as to take under Federal control every power development, every public-service corporation, or anything like one under the flag. If that is a good rule we should not stop at any half-way or first-step methods. We should go the length.

In addition to the right-of-way act to which I have referred there are the power sites. They can be taken care of by simply providing that these power sites may be utilized under the right-of-way act, and if the lands are disposed of for other purposes—and many of these lands will not be used for power sites in our time or in a hundred years, and many of them never at all, and there are other uses to which people would like to put them—if they are acquired under the public-land law it shall be with a proviso that if ever needed at any time for power purposes the only cost to the user for power purposes shall be the agricultural value of the land. That cost would not stop, or hamper, or in anywise burden any development anywhere on earth.

I for one am willing to go further than that, and to have the Government write into every patent that is issued a provision requiring an acknowledgment of local control over any enterprise established on that land for the generation of electric energy. I will go as far as the most ardent or ultra conservationist to make State and local public control effective.

We can do these things very simply. They are absolutely effective. They dispose of the whole matter, and they dispose of it in harmony with the theory of our Government, in harmony with our institutions, and in a way that will encourage and protect development.

To go back just a little, to bring up a point that I hurried over, I wish to say that any legislation which is a fraud, which does something other than that which it is assumed to do or claimed or purposed to accomplish, or claimed to be purposed to accomplish, ought not to commend itself to any wise legislator. This bill, as to some of its provisions, is little less than a fraud. No one now openly denies the right of the States to control the nonnavigable waters within their borders; and yet the Federal Government, which disavows any control, in the paragraphs in the bill before the one in which is written down that self-denying ordinance, proceeds to assert control; and not only to assert control, but to levy its charges on the basis of that control.

Of course I am glad that section in which the Congress disclaims control over the water is in there. It is mouth-filling, and it has helped some of our western brethren to more nearly tolerate this bill than they could otherwise have done. But either that provision has no force and effect as written into this bill or else the other provisions of the bill have no force or effect, and you can take either horn of the dilemma you like. My own notion is that, while that section to which I have just referred does state an unquestioned fact, there may be a way, and it may have been discovered by the ingenious gentlemen who drafted this bill, whereby, through indirection, the Federal Government may be able to do something which it could not do directly and make it stick. That sort of legislation, however, does not ordinarily commend itself to thinking people.

We of the West claim no rights, privileges, or immunities that are not now enjoyed by all the people of the Union. We ask no special favors, though the Congress has been good to us in some respects, as it has been very good to other parts of the country. We are not asking that we shall have any opportunities of development that the balance of the Union has not had, has not now, and will not have in the future. We are just as anxious to secure the benefits of the development of our resources cheaply and in a way useful and beneficial to our people to the highest degree as anyone else can be. Furthermore we think we are not a pusillanimous folk and will not allow our power companies to charge unreasonable rates. Any such suggestion that our State can not control its affairs is an indictment not so much of our people as of your people, because we are of you, and everyone knows that no such indictment can be fairly or properly framed. All we ask of the Congress of the United States is that this question, which is simple, which involves no difficult problems, shall be settled along lines that will enable us to control our own domestic corporations and care for our own people and develop our resources, even as your people have developed theirs from the beginning. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH].

[Mr. CHURCH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN was recognized.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will yield for a moment, I would like to see if we can not get an agreement as to closing general debate. I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the time consumed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and such time as he may yield out of his hour, general debate be closed.

Mr. CARLIN. Is there any agreement in existence now as to closing general debate?

Mr. FERRIS. There is none. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of the time consumed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and such time as he may yield out of his hour, all debate be considered as closed.

Mr. CARLIN. One more question; I have not been in the House all of the time. Has there been any agreement reached as to voting on any amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. No; we have not reached the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman, reserving the right to object, if he is willing to indicate his course in the further consideration of the bill to-day.

Mr. FERRIS. If this unanimous consent is agreed to, I propose to have one section of the bill only read after general debate is closed and then quit.

Mr. STAFFORD. And then consider the bill under the five-minute rule the next Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, I thought we might consider the bill to-morrow and the next day, after the speeches that are for the special order to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. We have Friday and Saturday of this week practically open.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the leaders of the House on both sides are willing to pursue that course.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that after the time consumed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and such time as he may allot out of his hour, that general debate be closed and the bill be read under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection, with the understanding that there will only be the first paragraph of the bill read to-night.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; we will not take up the bill for amendment to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume very much time of the committee. The subject of dam legislation, or hydroelectric-power legislation, has been pending in Congress for a number of years. There is, first, the question of the matter of the development of power where the General Government owns the land adjacent to the power, where the streams are upon the public land. That is the matter referred to and provided for in this bill. In addition to that there is the question of the regulation of the construction of dams across navigable streams or in navigable waters, either in connection with or entirely apart from the improvement of the waters. Those matters are in the War Department, so far as the jurisdiction of the administrative end of the Government is concerned, and, in the main, in the House in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, except where they are directly connected with river or harbor improvements, when they come in the river and harbor bill from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. All phases of these matters have been before the House on repeated occasions. When I came into the House and was a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the practice was for anyone who desired to construct a dam across navigable waters to have some attorney prepare a bill, which was introduced into the House and referred to that committee. Some of those bills would be two or three sections, maybe a page, long, and some of them would be of many sections and many pages long, all varying one from another in their requirements.

I drew what is known as the general dam act, which is still the law. That is still a subject of controversy. This bill, however, relates only to the matter of the construction of dams for the development of power where the public land of the United States is affected. It is not a difficult thing to understand the principles which are the basis of the bill. On the one hand, where the Government owns public lands, it may by a general law provide a method by which a citizen of the United States acquires the absolute ownership of the land, to do with as he pleases. Of course, if he acquires the absolute ownership he has the power to do with it as he pleases, so far as the General Government is concerned. That was the policy of the Government for many years. Undoubtedly many places where the land, in connection with the development of power, is of immense value were given away by the Government upon what seems to me to have been fairly proper principles at that time. No one knew the value of this land in the future. No one a few years ago could project his mind far enough into the future to understand the great development of electricity and the immense power which could be developed in the way of electrical energy by the use of water falls. We adopted that plan for years. Necessarily it is a monopoly. Wherever the land can be used for the development of power, it is a monopoly necessarily. Whoever has the use of it to that extent has a monopoly. That is in the very essence of the thing. The question has arisen whether the Government should simply give away the use of the land or whether, either by lease or otherwise, it should in some way and to some extent control the use of this monopoly. The bill here draws this distinction. Instead of giving the land away, it proposes that the General Government shall lease the land under terms to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, in compliance with the law; but which at any time, as to future leases at least, could be changed by Congress. And these leases are to be for a period not to exceed 50 years. After all, while our friends from the West complain, this bill is in their interest, because out of this bill, when enacted into law, the people of those States will receive a portion of the benefits which the public gets, instead of some individuals in those States, or more likely living in Massachusetts, getting all of the benefits and the profit out of the use of this monopoly, because it is a monopoly essentially.

Inasmuch as the General Government owns the land in these States, it belonging to the people of the United States, where it is not a question merely of the occupation of the land and the tilling of the soil, which of itself is a monopoly, where it goes to acquiring some great benefit from the use of the land, either by the development of electrical power or by taking some mineral substance out of the land, where the man who had it, if he acquired it for nothing, made great wealth at once, I have for years been of opinion that it were better that this great wealth be partly divided up for the benefit of the people of the United States and partly for the benefit of those States where it is located. [Applause.] And really that is the essence of the bill. We may not all agree about the provisions in a bill of this sort. No two men would ever draw a bill identically alike covering the same subject, but I may say to the new Members of the House that this bill occupied a good deal of time in the last Congress, and was, I think, as thoroughly considered and with as able and determined opposition as any bill since I have been in the House. There was no phase of the propositions involved in the bill which was not considered and debated by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and other very able Members of the House. And the House itself did take action and make some corrections in the bill.

In connection with this matter, however, I desire to say a few words only on the other subject which will come before the House later from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The existing law upon the subject relating to the construction of dams in navigable waters, generally referred to as the general dam act, I drew, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and aided in the passage of, and it is the law. It provides the terms upon which dams in navigable waters can be granted, the War Department having authority to grant permission in some cases, but generally the permission still having to be granted by Congress. The law now provides, both as to dams and bridges across navigable waters, that if the dam or the bridge is to be constructed in or over a stream wholly within the limits of one State, the War Department has the authority to issue the permit without action of Congress; but that if it is an interstate stream passing from one State to another or dividing two States that law does not apply, and it requires the particular consent of Congress. And the habit here for years has been to pass special bills for bridges, sometimes for dams, referring to the general act of Congress.

We have endeavored to modify the existing dam act. We did it in the last House. We did modify it somewhat in, I believe, the Sixty-first Congress.

I want to refer for a moment to a report from one of the ablest men now in the Government service, a man for whom I have the highest regard, Secretary Garrison, Secretary of the War Department. I have a great deal of faith in his judgment about many things. He is a man of judicial mind. But all men in the Government service, and particularly at the head of departments, frequently get misled by the ignorance of their subordinates. Mr. Garrison in his recent report, at the very beginning of it, on page 3, referred to the failure of Congress at the last session to enact the Adamson bill into law. Referring to the existing dam act, he goes on to say:

> The evils of the existing law must be conceded; a consideration of the general dam act itself reveals them, and the lack of development under it in the face of a substantial demand makes proof of them. It is believed that though these evils are now generally understood, their full effect and far-reaching consequences are hardly appreciated. Without specifying here, it can in a word and in all truth be said that the existing law is a makeshift which effectually prevents all development. On the one hand it does not offer the rightful and necessary inducement for an economical and profitable development, nor on the other hand would it adequately protect the interests of the public if development were possible under it. Even were it sufficient in these regards it has been demonstrated that it would be unworkable in another. It is a general dam act in name only; while purporting to lay down general conditions to cover development in all cases, it nevertheless requires in each case the further special authorization by Congress, an inconsistency which invites a disregard of the general conditions, makes of each application an independent legislative proposition, and subjects each project to the delay and hazard of congressional action.

The trouble with an administrative officer here in one of the departments who never before he came here had any knowledge whatever of general procedure or the precedents in Congress is that he frequently makes a mistake and slops over. Now, the same criticism that Secretary Garrison levels against this act might be made against the general bridge act. Yet Congress is not willing, and never will be on the dictum or the request of an administrative officer, to turn over to that administrative officer the absolute and complete power to determine in each case whether it shall construct obstructions over any or across the navigable waters of the United States. Most of the special bills which we pass here are passed as a matter almost of form, and yet not one of them is ever passed without having some investigation by a committee and having a report from the War Department itself as to the propriety of the action, and Congress will never be willing to let Mr. Garrison, as an administrative officer—which means some engineer whom no one could locate perhaps—to determine whether a bridge or a dam shall be constructed across the Mississippi River or many or most of the other navigable streams of the United States. And we are not going to change our policy because Mr. Garrison does not like it, and does not like it because he does not know anything about it. Nor is his charge correct that the present dam act is bad because there has been no development under it. The general dam act was passed in 1906, and Congress proceeded to pass a number of special acts granting permission to people to construct dams in accordance with the general dam act. There is no lack of application. There were many bills before the committee. We passed a number of them, until President Roosevelt vetoed the James River bill, in Missouri, and the International Falls or Rainy River bill, in Minnesota. Of course, when the President announced that he would veto all bills which came to him we quit passing them. It was not a lack of applications from people who wanted to construct dams. It was the refusal of Congress to pass bills which the President announced he would veto, and I may say in passing that if President Roosevelt had known what was in the general dam act before he vetoed the bill, I do not think he would have vetoed it. He did not know what constituted the law when he sent his veto to Congress. Under that law there was constructed the Rainy River Dam at International Falls. I have never heard of any complaint of the lack of power to obtain money for it. It is one of the greatest developed water powers in the country. I do not know what the horsepower is, but it is an immense plant. They obtain millions and millions of dollars for its development, and although it was constructed under the general dam act, it properly, I think fairly, at least, serves the interests of the Government. When Mr. Taft became President the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had promised Mr. Roosevelt to propose amendments to the general dam act. They were proposed.

I went to the President of the United States and said to him, "We have propositions to amend the general dam act. While I do not think they are necessary, yet I think some of them may be wise, and I want to know if we can find out in advance what will be satisfactory to the President, so that he will not veto the bills that we pass hereafter in accordance with the general act."

All Presidents have the right to change their minds. I have no complaint. President Taft said the changes that were proposed were perfectly satisfactory, and we passed a number of bills in accordance with the changes. There was no lack of applications; but after a while he vetoed one on the recommendation of somebody—I do not know who, but probably somebody who had conservation on the brain but did not know what was in the law. In my judgment, if the War Department had ever properly construed the general dam act, it would be a perfect law. I do not think myself it is perfect with the construction which the War Department put upon it. But Mr. Garrison is mistaken in thinking that it shows there was a lack of confidence on the part of investors. There has been no lack of confidence. In all the history of this Government, so far as Congress is concerned, I do not think there is an instance where men ever invested money, still with Congress having the power to take it away from them by repeal or otherwise, where that power has been exercised. While we have retained control, no one has ever been robbed of his investment by any act of Congress, so far as I have ever been able to learn; and I do not think there is any danger of that.

When the general dam act comes before us again for revision, as it probably will this winter, the contest over this bill will be to-day as child's play compared with the other proposition. There are immense water powers for development on the navigable streams of the United States. Some people believe they ought to be developed wholly in the interest of and for the profit of the men who happen to get possession of the land. I believe that if we have any power over the subject at all—and let me remind my western friends that these navigable waters are not, in the main, in the public-land States—I believe that where we have any control over it at all we ought to protect the interests of the United States and the people of the United States as well as the consumers of the power to be developed. [Applause.] That question, I hope, we may be able to determine at this session of Congress. There is one thing that may interfere with it. Our beloved western friends—and they are all, I hope, my friends, as I am a friend of all of them—have not so much influence in the way of numbers as they have, comparatively, in another distinguished legislative body. I do not know how much may be yielded to them, but if our western friends want to develop properties, if they want to construct dams and hydroelectric power plants, build up industries around them, and have the power to tax, as they talk about, the investment, which is theirs, and in the end have this money paid into the school funds, which they are not entitled to have, they ought to support this bill in this body and use their influence to support it in the body at the other end of this Capitol. [Applause.]

I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the public lands of the United States, including Alaska, reserved or unreserved, including lands in national forests, the Grand Canyon and Mount Olympus National Monuments, and other reservations, not including national parks or military reservations, for a period not longer than 50 years, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, and other works necessary or convenient to the development, generation, transmission, and utilization of hydroelectric power, which leases shall be irrevocable except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms: Provided, That such leases shall be given within or through any of said national forests or other reservations only upon a finding by the chief officer of the department under whose supervision such forests, national monument, or reservation falls that the lease will not injure, destroy, or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such forest, national monument, or reservation was created or acquired: Provided further, That in the granting of leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, give preference to applications for leases for the development of electrical power by States, counties, or municipalities, or for municipal uses and purposes: And provided further, That for the purpose of enabling applicants for a lease to secure the data required in connection therewith, the Secretary of the Interior may, under general regulations to be issued by him, grant preliminary permits authorizing the occupation of lands valuable for water-power development for a period not exceeding one year in any case, which time may, however, upon application, be extended by the Secretary of the Interior if the completion of the application for lease has been prevented by unusual weather conditions or by some special or peculiar cause beyond the control of the permittee.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the two speeches which are to be delivered, I believe, by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS]——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] speaks Friday, but there are two Democratic Members who are scheduled to speak to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. KITCHIN. That after those two speeches——

Mr. MANN. Let me make a suggestion. I suppose the gentleman is about to make a request with reference to this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There is a special order for to-morrow, a bill from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads about savings-bank deposits. It may or may not take any length of time. There is nothing on the calendar. Why would it not be fair to give this bill a privileged status and then we can take it up to-morrow, Friday, or Saturday or at any other time?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that is a good idea, and I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that this bill, H. R. 408, be given a privileged status. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of this bill, the final vote upon it, the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. FREAR, be given one hour in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that after the final disposition of House bill 408 the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] be allowed to address the House for not exceeding one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members on both sides of the House who have spoken on the water-power bill have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. FERRIS. For five legislative days.

Mr. MANN. This refers to their own speeches.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is not customary to limit the time for Members to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the water-power bill have the right to extend their remarks, without limiting the time. Of course the remarks to be confined to this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1773. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Kermit, W. Va.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3681. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Tulsa, Okla.

DYESTUFFS.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert a short article in the RECORD giving the actual conditions in regard to the acute situation of dyestuffs. The article is from the Annual Review of the Journal of Commerce, a purely business publication. It will only take a short space in the RECORD, and Members will want to see it as they may be called upon shortly to vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to print some statistics that he mentions in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 6, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

Almighty God, in whom dwelleth all fullness of life and power, we call upon Thee in the midst of the great and perplexing problems of our national life. We thank Thee that as we come to Thee we are assured of the essential unity of the moral life of this great people, and that we know the strength of our national life lies in the high ideals of the people of this country. Keep us faithful to Thee, the Author of the divine law. Give us reverence for life, that we may not only respect the right to live, but be inspired by the possibilities of a holy life. BUREAU OF FARM LOANS.

Mr. NORRIS. I introduce a bill providing for the establishment of a bureau of farm loans in the Department of Agriculture.

The bill (S. 3201) providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Farm Loans in the Department of Agriculture was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the bill will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS. A similar bill was introduced in the last Congress, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee was discharged from its consideration and it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I have no particular choice as to the committee to which this bill should be referred, but I think it would be better to have it referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN THE YELLOWSTONE PARK.

Mr. WALSH. I introduce the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 3205) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect the birds and animals in the Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1894, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WALSH. The bill is intended to change the existing law in relation to the extent of the punishment to be inflicted in the case of the unlawful killing of birds or animals within the national park, in order that jurisdiction of crimes of that character may be brought within the scope of the operation of the commission to relieve the Federal court at Cheyenne of the obligation of trying those cases. It should accordingly, in my estimation, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

METRIC SYSTEM IN EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have here a report on the use of the metric system in export trade by Director S. W. Stratton, of the Bureau of Standards. It is regarded by many as a very important paper, especially useful in connection with the foreign trade, and it is desired that it shall be printed as a public document. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing with reference to its publication as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

In that connection I wish to say that the Bureau of Mines has informed me that they have a list of 8,000 operators to which they desire these proceedings to be mailed. I shall ask the Committee on Printing to authorize the printing of 10,000 copies of this document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

FISCAL AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (H. DOC. NO. 495).

Mr. CHILTON. I present the report of the joint select committee appointed under the act of March 3, 1915, to determine the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD. There are many accompanying papers and much evidence, which will be filed with the Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF JOINT SELECT COMMITTEE APPOINTED PURSUANT TO THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF MARCH 3, 1915, TO DETERMINE THE FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

To the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your committee, appointed pursuant to the act of Congress approved March 3, 1915, which was in the language following—

"That a joint select committee shall be appointed, consisting of three Senators, to be named by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and three Members of the House, to be named by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based"—

Beg leave to submit the following unanimous report.

The committee met on March 15, 1915, and organized by electing W. E. CHILTON, a Senator from the State of West Virginia, as chairman, and HENRY T. RAINEY, a Representative in Congress from the State of Illinois, as secretary, and on that date recessed to meet at the call of the chairman.

Pursuant to the call of the chairman, the committee met in the city of Washington on October 20, 1915, for the purpose of obtaining all knowledge in its power to obtain touching the question of "the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based."

The committee was in open session almost every day from October 20, 1915, to November 16, 1915, hearing the evidence and argument of persons appearing voluntarily and persons appearing upon the invitation and request of the committee, and has since had such evidence and arguments under its careful consideration.

Several briefs were filed on behalf of various organizations and by individuals, and many communications from individuals and organizations were received by the committee.

All of this evidence and argument, both oral and written, the committee has ordered to be printed in its hearings and has carefully considered, believing it to be most important for the guidance of this and future Congresses of the United States that a definite finding of facts be made upon the questions presented for determination; and therefore, while the committee was very liberal in affording time and opportunity for a thorough presentation of facts, circumstances, opinions, and views of those interested and competent to give evidence, this was with the sole idea of establishing facts from which just conclusions could be drawn.

Of the two questions submitted to your committee, it first considered the following, viz, what is "the proper proportion of * * * interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively," and now submits the following statement with the reasons upon which its conclusion is based.

We find that the interest on the funded debt should be paid by moneys from the Treasury of the United States and 50 per cent charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia and 50 per cent charged to the amount appropriated for the expenses of the District of Columbia from the moneys of the United States.

The "funded debt" consists entirely of 3.65 bonds (so-called because of the rate of interest they bear) of the District of Columbia amounting at this date to $6,223,000, and of which $975,408 is paid yearly, one-half by the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half by the moneys of the United States.

The time of payment of this funded debt extends to the year 1924, but with an annual appropriation of approximately $975,408 the debt will be fully and completely paid a year or two prior to 1924, and when paid the District of Columbia will have no other funded debt.

This funded debt had its origin in the very extraordinary expenditures for city improvements, principally the establishing, grading, and paving of streets and avenues, the construction of sanitary sewers, the planting of trees, and generally the rebuilding and reequipment of the city of Washington from a then existing deplorable condition of utility and sanitation along the lines of a great National Capital, which it was intended to be and which destiny it is fulfilling.

These expenses accumulated between 1871 and 1874 in very large amounts burdensome upon both the District of Columbia and its citizens, which burdens became fully realized and for which relief was first sought by the act of June, 1874, providing, among other things:

"That a joint select committee shall be appointed, consisting of two Senators, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and two Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare a suitable frame of government for the District of Columbia and appropriate drafts of statutes to be enacted by Congress for carrying the same into effect, and report the same to the two Houses, respectively, on the first day of the next session thereof; and they shall also prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of said government, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which should be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based."

On the 23d of June, 1874, the sundry civil act of that date makes reference to interest on the funded debt, as follows:

"All the above sums, except so much thereof as may be paid for interest, as aforesaid, to be considered and adjudged hereafter as a part of the proper proportional sum to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia."

The message of President Grant in December, 1874, contains the following:

"The act of Congress of June 20, 1874, contemplates an apportionment between the United States Government and the District of Columbia in respect to the payment of the principal and interest of the 3.65 bonds. Therefore in computing with precision the bonded debt of the District the aggregate sums above stated, as respects 3.65 bonds now issued, the outstanding certificates of the board of audit and the unadjusted claims pending before that board should be reduced to the extent of the amount to be apportioned to the United States Government in the manner indicated in the act of Congress of June 20, 1874."

The appropriation act of February 1, 1875, contains the following provision:

"That the sum of $182,500 in currency, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated for the payment of the interest on the bonds of the District of Columbia, known as 3.65 bonds, due on February 1, 1875, issued under the act entitled 'An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1874; said interest to be paid by the Treasurer of the United States or the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in New York on surrender of the proper coupons: Provided, That the said sum hereby appropriated shall be considered and adjusted as a part of the proper proportional sum to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and toward the payment of the interest on the funded debt of the District."

The act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stats., 343), is as follows:

"To pay on behalf of the United States, as a portion of the general expenses of the District of Columbia, to be expended by the Commissioners of said District, $1,060,000, only to be drawn as needed for immediate use; and $300,000 of this sum shall be available from the passage of this act, no salaries to be changed from the standard fixed under the act of June 20, 1874.

"To pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds issued under the act entitled 'An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' $185,000; and the salary of the commissioner of the sinking fund, acting as treasurer thereof, shall be $1,000 per annum."

The debates in the Senate and in the House of Representatives of the United States during the years 1874, 1875, and 1876 substantiate the theory that the interest on the funded debt was then understood by Congress as being paid one-half through District of Columbia revenues and one-half through the General Government.

On January 26, 1875 (vol. 9, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 749), the following dialogue took place in the House prior to the passage of H. R. 4483, which later became the act of February 1, 1875, from which we have just quoted.

"Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 4483) for the payment of interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia. The amendment of the committee strikes out the words 'in coin' after the words 'one hundred and eighty-two thousand five hundred dollars.'

"Mr. RANDALL. Is there any report accompanying this bill?

"Mr. GARFIELD. I send to the desk to be read a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"Mr. RANDALL. I wish to reserve a point of order on this bill.

"Mr. GARFIELD. Let the report be read.

"Mr. HOLMAN. It should be understood that the point of order on this bill is not waived.

"The SPEAKER. The point of order will be reserved till the communication has been read.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"January 11, 1875.

"To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

"The Commissioners of the District respectfully request that the attention of Congress may be called to the necessity of legislative provision for the payment of the interest on the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, entitled 'An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.' These bonds are generally known as '3.65 bonds.' The act of Congress above cited pledged the faith of the United States to the payment (by proper proportional appropriation and by taxation on property within the District) of the interest on said bonds as well as to the creation of a sinking fund for payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

"The same act of Congress contemplates the ascertainment, through future legislation, of the proper proportion of the expense of the government of the District of Columbia, including interest on its funded debt, which should be borne by the District and by the United States, respectively. This proportion has not yet been determined by the requisite legislation. Upon the funded debt of the District of Columbia, other than the 3.65 bonds, the interest, including that due January 1, 1875, has been paid or is in process of payment out of revenues from the taxes on property in the District.

"At the last session Congress authorized an advance from the United States Treasury for the payment of interest on the funded debt of said District, due July 1, 1874 (the 3.65 bonds not then having been issued), but it was required that the sum thus advanced should be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States from the treasury of the District, and this reimbursement has been made in full. The 3.65 bonds result, in principal part, from the funding of floating indebtedness of the late board of public works, which was created by an act of Congress, and whose operations were subject to congressional control, and to some extent were independent of interposition on the part of the municipal government of the District.

"After payment from the treasury of the District of the current expenses of the municipal government and of the interest on the funded debt of the District other than the 3.65 bonds, taxes on private property will not afford sufficient revenue to pay any part of the interest on the 3.65 bonds, which falls due on February 1, 1875. It results, therefore, that either congressional appropriation for this interest must be made or that there must be default in the payment of interest to which the faith of the United States is pledged. If the requisite sum be appropriated by Congress, it is advisable that the interest should be paid in the Treasury of the United States and the coupons canceled there. According to law, these bonds are registered in the office of the Registrar of the United States Treasury. It might also be provided that such sum as may be appropriated for this purpose shall be considered and adjusted hereafter as a part of the proper proportional sum to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia and of the interest on its funded debt."

The "future legislation" contemplated in the report just quoted must be read in connection with the act of June 23, 1874, providing that a "proper proportional sum" shall be paid by the United States, the same "to be considered and adjusted hereafter," and in view of the fact that Congress had already appointed a committee to ascertain what was a proper proportion for the Government to pay, and that the report of that committee was the basis of what is called the organic act of 1878, known as the half-and-half plan.

The following, from the remarks of Senator Thurman, of Ohio, made in January, 1876, in the Senate of the United States, is convincing:

"One word as to this guarantee, and then I will relieve the Senate from any further observations of mine. This guarantee is as plain as words can make it. It was maturely considered, and was a subject of much debate in the committee that reported it. There were Senators who thought it ought to be an absolute guarantee on the part of the Government to pay the interest and also the principal, and all the contractors were clamorous for such a guarantee. The committee would not yield. It would only make a qualified guarantee, and that guarantee was in these words:

"'And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal at maturity.'

"This act contemplated that the General Government should pay a proportional part of the expenses of the government within this District, and that proportional part of it was supposed would be ascertained by the joint committee that was to frame a permanent form of government for the District; and here is a pledge that the Government of the United States will pay that proportional part. What it should be was not determined by this act; it was to be the subject of investigation; but whenever found, here is the pledge that the Government would, by payments out of the Public Treasury of its proportional part of the expenses of government in this District, contribute to pay the interest on these 3.65 bonds and provide a sinking fund for the liquidation of the principal."

Reference is also made to the act of March 14, 1876 (19th Stat., p. 211), to the act of July 31, 1876, and of March 3, 1877.

The act of April 30, 1878, was followed by the so-called "organic act" of June 11, 1878, providing for the payment of the debt of the District by definite apportionment of 50 per cent, respectively, to the United States and the District of Columbia.

The Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, in an official opinion rendered January 3, 1914, on this question, reaches the following conclusions:

"It remains for us, upon the premises thus, as I believe, satisfactorily established, to predicate proper conclusions.

"1. The indebtedness represented by the 3.65 bonds was indebtedness of the District of Columbia and not in any part the indebtedness of the United States and the bonds of the District of Columbia.

"2. To restore the credit of the District of Columbia, make acceptable to creditors of the District 3.65 bonds by a guaranty of payment, and assume the to-be-determined equitable proportion to be contributed by the United States toward the expenses of the District, the United States covenanted with the holders of these bonds that it would provide, by taxation on the property within the District, a portion of the revenues necessary to pay the interest on and principal of these bonds, and that it would provide the other portion, to be determined, by appropriation out of the revenues of the United States.

"3. By the organic act of June 11, 1878, the portion to be provided by taxation on the property and privileges in the District was declared to be 50 per cent and the portion to be apportioned out of the funds of the United States 50 per cent, and that has ever since remained and now is the law.

"4. The liability of the United States to the holders of the 3.65 bonds is therefore that of a guarantor that one-half of the principal and interest of these bonds will be paid out of the revenues of the District, derived from taxation on the property and privileges in the District, and that of a promisor that it will provide for the payment of the other half by appropriations out of the Treasury of the United States.

"I have, therefore, to advise you that under the 'act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes' (37 Stat., 938), payment to be made during said year of interest on and sinking fund for the payment of the funded debt in question should be made, within the limits of the amount appropriated for said purpose, with moneys withdrawn from the Treasury of the United States by the Treasurer in accordance with section 2 of the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 470), and 50 per cent thereof charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia and 50 per cent thereof charged to the amount appropriated for the expenses of the District from the moneys of the United States and the money so paid should be accounted for accordingly."

On December 15, 1914, the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered another official opinion on this same matter, adhering to and reaffirming his conclusions as last above cited.

It is our opinion that the original intent, the understanding of Members of Congress, the unvarying practice of the years, the provisions of the various laws of appropriation, the law definitely fixing the respective apportionment of payment, and, above all, the justice of the matter as affecting the General Government, the holders of the bonds and the District of Columbia lead certainly to the conclusion that the interest on the funded debt be continued to be paid, 50 per cent from the revenues of the District of Columbia and 50 per cent by appropriation from the moneys of the United States.

The committee next determined the question of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively.

We find after a most careful consideration of all of the evidence and circumstances as shown to exist at this time that there is no reason for any arbitrary rule of proportionate contribution for the expenses of the District of Columbia by the residents thereof and by the people of the United States who reside outside the District of Columbia; that the correct rule should be that the responsibility in taxation of the residents of the District of Columbia be as fixed and certain as the responsibility of residents of other American cities comparable with the city of Washington; that with the payment of such taxes as may be equitably and properly assessed against privately owned taxable property the financial responsibility of the residents of the District should be concluded; that the present assessment valuation of privately owned real estate in Washington is fair and reasonable; that the sum of money collected as such taxes be paid into the Treasury of the United States, there to be incorporated into a trust fund for the benefit of the District of Columbia, and that the revenues thus collected be expended in the government of the District of Columbia, and for no other purpose; that the United States pay from its moneys all the balance of whatever sum is deemed necessary to appropriate for the proper municipal expenses of the District of Columbia after consideration of the reports and estimates of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the needs of said District; and, as a conclusion, which should be of the greatest weight, we urge upon Congress that its appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia should always be in such sum as will not only continue the city of Washington and the District of Columbia in every respect as the splendid and beautiful central residence of this great Nation but also cause it to become and be forever maintained as a model for all the cities of the world.

The Constitution of the United States of America, in clause 17 of section 8, gives Congress the power—

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings."

The expressed provision of "exclusive legislation" necessarily makes the control of this body of land, known as the District of Columbia, vest in the National Government and makes this highest national power the government of this Federal District.

Bitter experience in the former capitals of the United States had caused the framers of our Constitution to place its central seat of Government in a location where the national authority would be supreme, where its records and its representatives could be safe from attack, and where, under its own direction, a structural plan for upbuilding and maintenance could be commenced and continued without interruption by any lesser or local authority.

In fixing the District of Columbia as the National Capital and home of the Government, the Congress did not proceed by capture, condemnation, or any other arbitrary method. It acquired political dominion by cession from the States of Maryland and Virginia and ownership of the land by private contract, and when all of this had been done by mutual understanding and definite written agreements and conveyances from the proprietors of the land it laid out a National Capital and began its construction.

Everyone who has purchased property within the District of Columbia since has done so with the knowledge and distinct understanding that the people of the United States had made the power of Congress over the territory exclusive. Everyone who has since adopted the city of Washington as his home has done so with notice that it was beyond even the power of Congress to escape the burden or evade the duty imposed by the Constitution, and when he became a resident of Washington, or acquired property in the District of Columbia, he put himself voluntarily within the Government reservation and subject to such control as the conveniences and necessities of Congress in administering the National Government and building the National Capital might render necessary.

Senator Southard, of New Jersey, in a memorable report from the District Committee, as early as February 2, 1835, said:

"The design of the Constitution and its founders was to create a residence for the Government where they should have absolute and unlimited control, which should be regulated and governed by them without the interference of partial interests in the States, which should be built up and sustained by their authority and resources—not dependent upon the will or resources of any State or local interest."

This was the grand plan conceived by the fathers of the Government, the wisdom of which grows more and more apparent with the coming and going of the years.

Maj. L'Enfant, who first drew the city's plan, said:

"No nation, perhaps, had ever before the opportunity offered them of deliberately deciding on the spot where their capital city should be fixed or of combining every necessary consideration in the choice of situation, and although the means now within the power of the country are not such as to pursue the design to any great extent, it will be obvious that the plan should be drawn on such embellishment which the increase of the wealth of the nation will permit it to pursue at any period, however remote."

The growth of the city in utility and in beauty has kept pace with the growing strength of the Nation. Its beginning was most naturally restricted because of lack of funds, yet the wisdom of the founders was such that the clearest and broadest view prevailed as a plan for the city which was to be.

It followed the development of other cities, except that the others had as their bases industrial, manufacturing, and commercial enterprises wherewith to build up the city, maintain their public utilities, and provide their people with employment, while the city of Washington has always been practically without manufacturing and with but little commerce, but was the place of government of all the States.

It has always retained its identity as a National Capital and has never become, as other cities have, a mart of trade or of commerce.

It has always retained the plan of development foreseen with the broadest and clearest vision and safeguarded through the years.

A great contribution in patriotism and true citizenship was made by those citizens of Washington who, when the city was extending its limits through natural growth, protested against the varied and indiscriminate platting of land by private owners, and caused to be prepared a plan extending to newly developed territory within the District of Columbia the same plan as that made for the original city, which was adopted; so that now, and for all future time, the beautiful plans of the city of Washington are extended to the outermost limits of the entire District.

Let it not be imagined that the growth in utility and beauty of the city of Washington was without travail, for the early years of 1800 saw it advancing slowly, slowly, but always surely and toward a definite end. At the time of the change from that of town to city Washington was not the Washington of to-day, but is shown to be as of about the year 1871, a city without paving, without proper sanitary conveniences, without proper lighting, with inadequate transportation facilities, lacking in civic conveniences and even necessities.

From 1871 to 1874, through the appointed agencies of the United States, a spirited, even drastic, campaign of improvement in Washington was inaugurated and continued which resulted in the widening, grading, filling, and paving of many streets, avenues, and alleys; the making of new streets, avenues, parks, and boulevards; the building of both storm and sanitary sewers; the planting of many trees; in short, a radical renewal of the entire city, but upon the same plan of civic grandeur which presaged a beautiful Capital City.

This was attended with great expense and assessment made against the District of Columbia and against the owners of property therein, and so oppressive were these imposed taxes and assessments that petitions of remonstrance against the then governing boards were filed with Congress, and committees were appointed to investigate and report upon charges of excessive and needless expenditure and mismanagement of the city's affairs. The controlling civic body under which these expenditures were authorized was the board of public works, this being a part of the so-called Territorial government existing in Washington at that time.

In June, 1874, by authority of Congress, the Territorial form of government was abolished, and District control was placed in the hands of three commissioners, practically the plan now existing, where the two civil commissioners are appointed by the President from among the residents of the District, the third commissioner being a Government engineer detailed for service as commissioner in the District of Columbia.

In 1878 the so-called "organic act" was passed, containing the following legislative provision:

"To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates, Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimate shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District, other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia."

Under this act the appropriations by the General Government in all the years since 1878 have averaged just about 50 per cent of the expenses of the District of Columbia.

We believe the fact that the national appropriation has averaged half of these expenses is not the result of chance but of design, and that the so-called "half-and-half law," which was conceived as an economic necessity to lift the burden of debt from the oppressed District and its tax-paying citizens, was justified by the exigencies of the time and the conditions of that day. It came into being because the consensus of the best thought of that day was that justice demanded that the Federal Government should definitely come to the aid of the District and its citizens in the payment of this vast debt incurred for public works. This, we think, is the real reason for the passage of the "half-and-half" law.

While there were those in 1878 who doubted the propriety or even the expediency of legislation fixing a certain and definite ratio of contribution by the Government to the payment of the expenses of the District, this act was apparently considered a satisfactory compromise solution of a problem then exceedingly difficult of proper determination by reason of the conditions in the District of Columbia at that time.

But we think that the conditions of to-day and of the few years last past are so different from the conditions of 1878 that this arbitrary rule—a rule of then seeming necessity—need no longer be applied to District appropriations.

Then the District was under a great debt; to-day that debt has been very largely paid, and the next few years will see it completely paid in the manner we have described herein.

Then the District was suffering from the many experimental forms of government which had been tried in successive years almost; to-day the form of government is one of long existence, tried and tested.

Then the population was less than one-half of the nearly 350,000 people who now reside in Washington.

Then the splendid utility and beauty of the city planned on a national base were just beginning to be seen; now the Government has many buildings which are of the very highest standard of architecture, and has laid the foundation, by purchase of additional areas of land, for more public buildings, parks, and reservations.

More and more every year is land being acquired and held for strictly governmental purposes, withdrawn from participation in assessment and taxation.

The increasing needs of the Government in this, its central home, demand, and will continue to demand, more land, more buildings, more reservations.

All of this means that the District of Columbia and the National Government should not be longer on any partnership basis of contribution, but that the National City, the Nation's home, should be a district where the national authority is not only supreme but a district where the just pride of a great people should insist upon its maintenance in a manner most fitting to the dignity of the citizens whose manifestation of central government it is.

Nothing is clearer to us than it never was the intent that this District should bear all the very extraordinary burdens of expense incident to its plan and occupancy as a national city, and any such proposed burden would be most inequitable and unjust now.

But around and about this great workshop of national affairs has grown a city with all the complexities incident to the multifarious utilities of a modern American city.

The rights of the people of the District are to be considered, and we would therefore recommend that the people of Washington pay a tax comparable in assessment, rate, and amount to that tax paid by the residents of other cities similar in population and location to the city of Washington.

This we believe is eminently fair, and there should be no greater exaction in taxation from the people of the District of Columbia.

In seeking to apportion benefits resulting to the General Government and to the citizens and residents of the District of Columbia it is manifest that no line or rule of distinction can be found.

The expenditures of the District of Columbia are for police and fire protection, education, sanitation and health, charities, correction and reform, the care of the insane and the poor, and in each and every one of these specific items of expense both the General Government and the District of Columbia are benefited, but the ratio of benefit is impossible to determine and under our thought unnecessary.

Here, in addition to the Executive and his Cabinet, the Supreme Court and other Federal courts and the Congress of the United States, are over 40,000 employees of the Federal Government. These persons, drawn from every State in the Union with their families, compose a large part of the population of the District.

Here come every day almost thousands of visitors, young and old, to all of whom the lessons of patriotism resulting from a visit to the Nation's Capital result in a higher type of citizenship, and the pride of participation in the affairs of our Government grows stronger with the realization of its latent power and outward dignity and grandeur.

The protection to life and property, the measures to secure health, happiness, and the benefits of education, as well as the measures for the care of the poor and the sick, are beneficial not alone to the actual residents of the District of Columbia, but to all the American people between the great oceans.

The question of taxation in the District of Columbia, while not especially mentioned in the designation of the authority of the committee, is necessarily linked with an inquiry concerning municipal expenses, and therefore we have given it attention.

The report of the assessor of the District of Columbia, as made October 1, 1915, shows that "the total area of the District of Columbia is 69.245 square miles, or 44,316.8 acres. In land it is slightly over 61 square miles and in water about 8 square miles, or about 39,200 acres in land and 5,116 acres in water. The original city of Washington contained 6,111 acres, and Georgetown has about 550 acres, including old additions. About 5,550 acres are contained in all parks, large and small."

The lands in the District of Columbia are assessed triennially and the assessment, beginning July 1, 1914, for the fiscal year 1915, is as follows:

The regular rate of taxation on property in the District of Columbia is 1½ per cent on an assessment of not less than two-thirds of true value.

It is, of course, not the purpose of this committee to act as a board of tax assessment and equalization of property within the District of Columbia, for that work obviously was not intended to be assumed by this committee. But we have heard evidence of tax assessments and tax rates in many American cities, some of this evidence being most instructive, other of it affording interesting comparisons as the conditions resembled or differed from conditions in Washington.

The annual tax in Washington is approximately $16 per capita.

In the judgment of your committee this is a reasonable tax levy at this time, especially when we consider, as we must, that a large proportion of the population here pays but a small amount of the taxes imposed.

The subjects of taxation in Washington differ somewhat from those of many other American cities. Here, for instance, intangible personal property is not a subject of taxation, and taxes on franchises and earnings of public-service corporations are not classed as personal taxes.

We find from the evidence of fair-minded men, residents of Washington, familiar with real estate values in general, that the present assessment of real estate for taxation is fair and reasonable.

We are perfectly aware that many discrepancies may appear even in the best regulated assessment plan and instances of inequality may be found in the present assessment in Washington, but taken as a whole, the assesments made against all classes of property in the different locations in the city are equitable.

An examination of the assessments in some former years leads us to believe that in those years many of the tax valuations were too low and that then many more inequalities of taxation existed than now, and that under the present assessment an earnest and honest effort has been made to adjust assessments for taxation, so that substantial justice may be done to all concerned.

The committee believes that independently of the question of what should be the proper subjects of taxation in the District of Columbia, the payment of taxes on real estate from the assessments as they are now constituted is a fair and reasonable response in such taxation for municipal benefits received by the citizens of the District.

It is our opinion that the revenues derived from taxes assessed and collected in the District of Columbia and paid into the Treasury of the United States should be used for the expenses of the District of Columbia alone and that all of the balance of money necessary for the government of the District of Columbia, the maintenance of all proper utilities, the expenses due to natural growth and development, and the construction of necessary bridges and aqueducts, the erection of buildings and monuments, the purchase of parks, all things now necessary to a modern city, should have their highest and fullest expression here, this made possible by participation of all the people of all the States in the maintenance of the Nation's city.

In connection with the subject of local taxation in the District of Columbia, the committee is fully mindful that there was no expressed delegation of authority for it to investigate and report any change in the proposed taxing system which it might find would be beneficial, and therefore, while we believe there should be a proper tax on inheritances in the District and some changes and reforms of procedure in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia, we prefer to submit these views later and in different form as individual expressions.

Our unanimous conclusion is that the rate of taxation in the District should be fixed and certain; that the Congress should pursue a definite policy of regular and liberal appropriations, having in view not only the permanent moral and physical advancement of the city, but also its preeminent beauty and grandeur as the municipal expression of the Nation's home and its people's pride.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a separate statement in connection with the report made by the chairman of the committee. As a member of the committee I desire to submit a statement of my separate views. They are not at all in conflict with the conclusions reached by the committee, which I am glad to say are unanimous, but give some additional reasons that appeal to me in support of those conclusions. I ask that this statement may also be printed in the RECORD in connection with the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. WORKS.

To the Congress of the United States:

While I agree with the other members of the committee upon the ultimate question to be determined and have signed the general report, I have felt constrained to express my own views on the subject separately in order, principally, to give my reasons for the conclusions I have reached.

The bill raising the committee provides, "whose duty it shall be to prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based."

Evidently, the imposition of duty upon the committee in this form proceeds upon the theory that there are within the territorial boundaries of the District of Columbia two distinct corporate or governmental organizations, each of which is responsible in part for the administration of the District and liable for a portion of its expenses. Nothing could be further from the truth. The District is the Capital of the Nation. Congress is by the Constitution given complete and exclusive jurisdiction and control over it. Being exclusive, this power can not lawfully be delegated to any other municipal organization or body. In fact, none of this power or jurisdiction has been delegated to the District of Columbia. It is a nominal municipal corporation only, without officers, without authority, and without any function whatever to perform as such. The so-called District officers are appointed by and are, in fact, the officers of the National Government. It can make no laws, but is governed wholly by laws enacted by Congress. Its treasury, so-called and mentioned so often in appropriation bills, has no existence in fact. It has no money and no power to collect any. Its nominal officers, who are, in fact, officers of the Government, are only instruments of the Government for the levying and collection of taxes from property owners within the District. It can not make appropriations or pay any of its expenses. The money collected as taxes from property owners is not paid into the treasury of the District, because it has none, but into the National Treasury. It is not paid out by the District, but by the Treasurer of the United States upon the order of Congress. The title to some of the property in the District is held in its name; but the property belongs to the Government and is held by the District as a mere naked trustee, without power or control over it. In short, the nominal municipal corporation of the District of Columbia is a mere shell, without any authority, power, or responsibility, and without any of the attributes or functions of a municipal government. It is worse than that. It is a delusion and a snare. It has led the people of the District to believe they have a local government that is some shield and protection to them as against the power of Congress, and at the same time has led some Members of Congress and people outside of the District to believe that the National Government can divide the responsibility of maintaining, building up, and beautifying its own Capital with such a local government. The situation is wholly misleading and hurtful.

This bill directing the committee to ascertain the proper proportion of the expenses of the Capital to be borne, respectively, by the Federal Government and the District of Columbia is founded upon a wrong impression of the conditions as they exist, and is itself misleading. The District of Columbia never has been liable for any proportion of the expenses of the District, and never can be properly. It has never paid any part of the expenses, and probably never will. Its nominal officers, who are in fact the officers of the Government, have collected taxes from private individuals within the District and paid them into the National Treasury, without any responsibility or liability of any kind on the part of the District as a municipal power or entity. Obviously, therefore, the real and only possible question before the committee is not what proportion of the expenses of the District shall be paid by the District of Columbia, but what proportion of such expenses to be paid by the National Government shall be raised by taxation of the privately owned property in the District.

This involves, necessarily, the question whether the so-called half-and-half system now in force shall be continued in force and, if not, whether any other proportion as between the taxpayers and the Government shall be fixed.

In my own mind I have reached the following conclusions, for which I shall give my reasons and which I submit to the consideration of Congress:

1. The District of Columbia should convey to the United States all properties held in its name and the United States should assume and pay the debts standing against the name of the District.

2. The municipality of the District of Columbia should then be abolished, the territory of the District designated the City of Washington, and its affairs controlled and administered directly by the National Government.

3. The rate of taxation and basis of assessment should be reasonable as compared with other comparable cities.

4. All moneys derived from taxation should be paid into the National Treasury, to be applied to the payment of the expenses of the District, and the half-and-half system abolished.

5. The National Government should be wholly responsible for the conduct and support of its Capital, and all appropriations therefor should be made from the National Treasury without regard to the amount derived from taxation for that purpose.

6. All special assessments or charges against privately owned property for the opening or improvement of streets or other public improvements should be abolished and all laws providing therefor repealed.

7. The right to prosecute actions against the District of Columbia for past and future causes of action should be allowed as against the United States.

8. The residents of the District should be given representation in Congress and the right to select their representatives and to vote for presidential electors.

SHALL THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BE ABOLISHED?

I need say but little more on this branch of the subject. I have shown that practically the District of Columbia is a mere name without authority or responsibility. This is the Capital of the Nation for which the Nation alone is responsible. It must be apparent that there can be no divided authority or responsibility. I think the Government should once for all take over its own Capital and provide for and maintain it. And the name of it should be changed. To call the Capital of the country a "district" is incongruous and anything but pleasing. It should be made the City of Washington. Commissioners of the City of Washington should be appointed as a branch of the Government with authority within proper limits to manage and control its affairs. The commissioners should be Government officers and responsible as such. I am convinced that they should be given much broader and more comprehensive power and authority in dealing with local affairs than the District Commissioners now have. Provision should be made by Congress for a complete readjustment of conditions in the District. The laws regulating assessments and collection of taxes are badly in need of revision. So, I have no doubt, are other laws affecting District affairs.

The District of Columbia as a municipal corporation, as I have already pointed out, is worse than useless and should be speedily abolished.

SHALL THE HALF-AND-HALF SYSTEM BE ABOLISHED?

It may well be inferred from what I have said that in my judgment there should be no half-and-half system nor any other proportionate liability for the expenses of the District of Columbia as between the District and the Government. It is the Capital of the Nation over which the Government has full and exclusive jurisdiction and control. Its obligations and responsibilities should be equally broad and exclusive. It can not either lawfully or justly transfer any part of its duty or responsibility to the so-called municipality, the District of Columbia, or anybody else. It should have no wish or desire to do so. But that is just what it has attempted to do by the act of 1878, by which the half-and-half system was established. Congress fixes by law the tax rate and the basis of assessment and then matches what is raised by taxation, dollar for dollar. So Congress not only shifts half its responsibility to the taxpayers of the District, but limits its own responsibility by the amount thus raised.

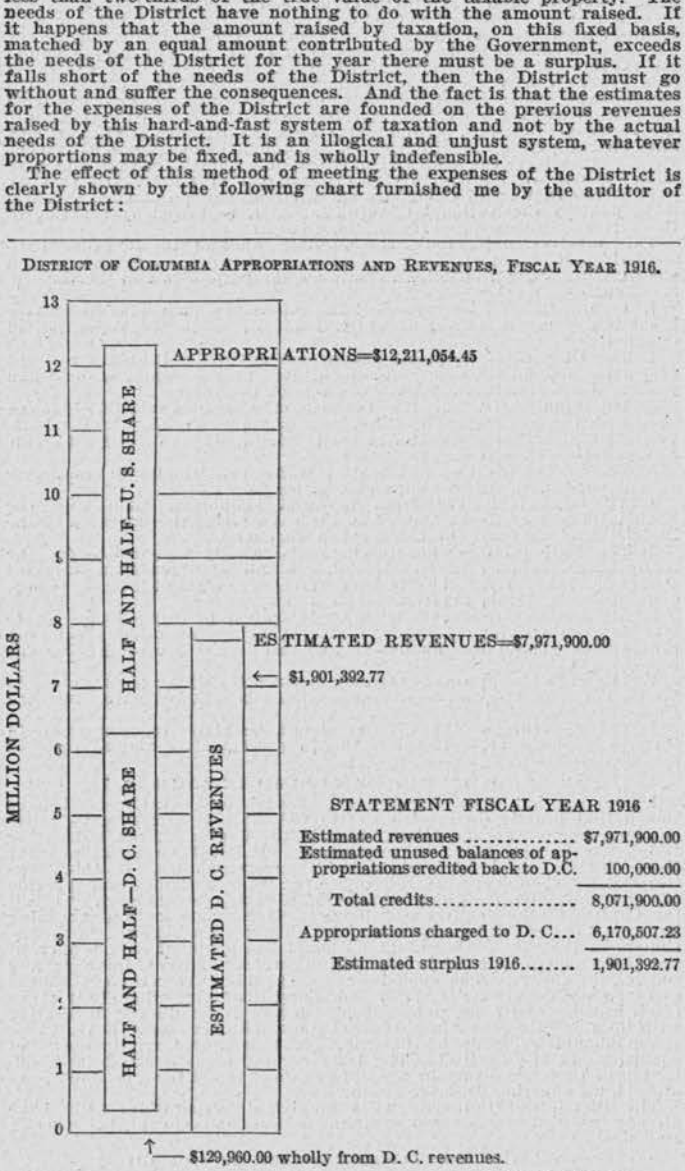
The so-called organic act, after requiring the commissioners to estimate the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the District, provides:

"To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia."



This clause of the act expressly limits the amount to be appropriated by the Government to 50 per cent of the amount estimated. It was contended at the hearing that there was no limit upon the amount that might be appropriated by the Government. But this is in the very face of the law and can not be maintained without doing violence to its express and unambiguous terms.

This system may have been justified at that time as a compromise, and as a means of extricating the District from a very unfortunate condition, but that reason no longer exists and there is no reason or excuse for even its nominal continuance.

But, as a matter of fact, the half-and-half system has never been in effect in any practical sense. The amount of taxes to be assessed and collected has never been founded upon the one-half of the expenses of the District. On the contrary, as I have said, Congress has fixed the rate of taxation at $1.50 a hundred and the basis of assessment at not less than two-thirds of the true value of the taxable property. The needs of the District have nothing to do with the amount raised. If it happens that the amount raised by taxation, on this fixed basis, matched by an equal amount contributed by the Government, exceeds the needs of the District for the year there must be a surplus. If it falls short of the needs of the District, then the District must go without and suffer the consequences. And the fact is that the estimates for the expenses of the District are founded on the previous revenues raised by this hard-and-fast system of taxation and not by the actual needs of the District. It is an illogical and unjust system, whatever proportions may be fixed, and is wholly indefensible.

The effect of this method of meeting the expenses of the District is clearly shown by the following chart furnished me by the auditor of the District:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS AND REVENUES, FISCAL YEAR 1916.

STATEMENT FISCAL YEAR 1916

Estimated revenues	$7,971,900.00
Estimated unused balances of appropriations credited back to D.C.	100,000.00
Total credits	8,071,900.00
Appropriations charged to D. C.	6,170,507.23
Estimated surplus 1916	1,901,392.77

A. TWEEDALE,
Auditor, D. C.

November 27, 1915.

This shows that the estimate of revenues to be derived from taxation for the fiscal year was $7,971,900. If the appropriation had been double this, as the half-and-half system requires, the amount appropriated would have been $15,943,800. Instead of that the total appropriation, which we must assume to have been what the District needed, was $12,211,054.45. The people of the District should have been taxed for one-half of this amount and no more, namely, $6,105,527.23. But, instead of that, by reason of the hard and fast $1.50 a hundred and assessment at two-thirds value, they were taxed for $7,971,900. Besides that, the District was entitled to a credit of $100,000, as shown by the chart, making its contribution $8,071,900. So, as shown by the chart, the people of the District were taxed for $1,901,392.77 more than their one-half. It may be said that this will be equalized some time in the future by an excess appropriation out of Government funds, but this does not meet the case by any means. Unless the rate of taxation or the amount of assessment is changed the people will, unless Congress is more liberal in its appropriations, be taxed beyond their one-half liability.

What the National Government should do is to treat the District as what it is—its own Capital—and take full responsibility for everything it needs or should have as the seat of government of a great and prosperous Nation, without regard to anything that may be derived from private individuals in the way of taxes or otherwise. It should pay its own money to support its own Capital. To enter into a partnership with a sham corporation to raise money to support its own Capital is too absurd to think about.

It does not follow, however, that the property owners within the District should not contribute toward its support. They should be taxed a reasonable amount for the support of the District in return for the benefits they receive from the government of it and no more. The amount of their taxes should not be measured by the needs of the District. Their taxes should be paid into the National Treasury and applied to District expenses, but the amount thus realized should in no way limit or control the amount to be expended by the Government for the support, maintenance, upbuilding, and beautification of the seat of government.

When the so-called organic act of 1878 was under discussion in the Senate, Senator Bayard, speaking of the half-and-half provision and of the peculiar conditions of the City of Washington, had this to say:

"If it is to be, as I think it ought to be, a Federal city worthy of the great Nation whose seat of government it is, then it seems to me that by far the greater portion of the expense must be borne by the Federal Government and not by the local inhabitants. Is it just that one-half of the expenses of these broad avenues, of these extensive improvements, of these luxurious streets is to be borne by the local inhabitants? It seems to me that it is unreasonable. I do not think they can bear it.

* * * * * * *

"This town is the mere center and habitation of the employees of the Government, the clerical force of the departments, people who are swept in and out of their offices by the ebb and flow of the power of political parties, strangers who come here during the sessions of Congress for a few days or a few weeks, or Members of Congress, whose interests and whose property lie entirely elsewhere.

"I want to ask the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill whether it is just that the people of Washington City shall pay the proportion of one-half of this expensive government in regard to the scale of which they never were consulted, in regard to which property that is to be taxed never was considered, or whether the fraction should not be much less."

And, in speaking of the expense of maintaining and keeping up the streets, he said further:

"That will entail an enormous expenditure, which, having some experience in regard to the expenses of that kind, I would say the local population of Washington are totally unable to bear. The property will not bear it; it is not worth it. If it is to be paid, it must be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, from which, in my judgment, it ought to be paid, because the laws contracting the expense and authorizing the outlay were passed without consultation with or without sufficient consideration in any way for the people whose property lies here.

* * * * * * *

"Is it just and right that they should be called to pay one-half the expense of this scale of adornment and improvement, intended not half so much for their use and delectation as for the use of those who come here and pass away after a few weeks' stay? I submit that it is a very grave and very fundamental question in this bill whether this equal division of the expense is just or right."

In January, 1896, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives to repeal the half-and-half provision of the act of 1878. On May 22 of the same year, in a report of the Committee on the District of Columbia against the bill, this was said:

"The six millions expended annually upon the Capital are not enough to meet the current reasonable and increasing municipal needs. The three millions contributed by the local taxpayers would be inadequate to sustain the National Capital as it now exists, or to keep it in line of natural development. One million of the three would be absorbed in interest and sinking fund upon the heavy debt; the greater part of another million is demanded for the schools, the District having no public-land grant to help it like those enjoyed by many of the States. The remaining million would have to meet such expenses as maintenance of the police, fire, and health departments; the construction and maintenance of municipal public works; the support and maintenance of charitable and reformatory institutions; the cleaning of streets; and the general cost of administration. And how they would be met may be imagined when it is remembered that over $3,500,000 are now expended upon these objects, and that the present appropriations are inadequate in respect to many of them."

* * * * * * *

"Nothing is more conspicuous in all the early utterances of our Presidents and public men than their insistence upon the nationality and the permanence of the City of Washington as the Capital. Why did Washington call it so continually, 'the Federal City' if it was to be only a mere municipality?"

* * * * * * *

On March 6, 1901, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] introduced in the Senate a resolution directing the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate the tax system in vogue in the District. In speaking of that question, Senator Hoar said:

"It seems to me that there is just one simple principle that ought to be applied to the residents of the District of Columbia. We should ascertain the average rate of taxation in well-ordered American cities, whether it be $1 on the thousand or $10 on the thousand or $15 on the thousand, or whatever sum, and then apply that to the personal property and real estate of every resident here.

"When that is done, with such exemptions as experience suggests in all like cases, the Government should pay the rest of the reasonable expenses of this District. I do not think that having one-half paid by the District and one-half paid by the Government has any scientific merit whatever. There is nothing in reason why it should be one-half rather than two-thirds or three-fourths. The Government is a great property owner here, and the credit of the City of Washington is the credit of the Nation. It is the National Capital, and it is the great national interest to have a well-ordered and beautiful and well-ornamented and arranged city here."

Senator Blackburn, who supported the act of 1878 and whose statements in its favor are often quoted in the briefs of the committee, was a witness at the present hearings, and gave his reasons for thinking that the half-and-half system that he then favored should not be continued in force under present conditions. He said:

"After a good deal of time was spent and the fullest investigation and research possible at that time was made, it seemed to me that the act known as the permanent form of government bill, the act of 1878, was proximately a fair adjustment of those questions. I did not believe at that time that the individual taxpayer here in equity should bear one-half of the expenses incident to the maintenance of this District. I believed it was an approximation to equity. And I not only believed but I was absolutely sure that that was the best that could be obtained for the property holders of the District at that time. Consequently, I favored the adoption of what was known as the half-and-half payment of municipal expenditures."

"If the half-and-half division of the expenditures was fair in 1878, it certainly is not fair now. For 36 years there has been a shifting of the holdings of real estate in this city, and those changes have always been one way. I am not aware of the fact that the Government has ever parted with a foot of real estate in the last 36 years. We only need to look out here to see the conclusive evidence that the Government for 36 years past has been acquiring additional real estate here, and to that extent disturbing the equilibrium on which that act was based.

"I do think, if the people of the District, the taxpayers, the property holders here, were paying their fair proportion of the expenditures in 1878 they certainly are paying more than their fair proportion of these expenditures now. We have seen all this property acquired by condemnation proceedings here between the railway station and the Capitol, and a much larger body of land down south of the Avenue acquired in the same way. The status of 1878 no longer exists now. For that reason I believe that the time has come to abolish the 50 per cent division of expenses between the private property holders and the Federal Government.

"There are other reasons that commend themselves to my judgment. I do not believe that the Federal Government ought to be in a business partnership with anybody. I do not think it comports with the dignity of a Nation of 100,000,000 people to maintain a business partnership with those who pay taxes in this District."

* * * * * * *

"I do not believe that any man should be benefited by or penalized because of his living in the Capital City. I think the property holders here ought to pay a fair, just tax upon their holdings. Congress has the absolute power over this District. Its control is not limited; its responsibilities ought to be as limitless as its power and authority. I believe that that partnership ought to be dissolved. The law of 1878 has stood the test of experience for more than one-third of a century. It has lasted longer than I thought it would endure at the time of its enactment.

"I think an unprejudiced, fair judgment would declare that it has not only lasted longer but has answered the purposes of its enactment better than was contemplated at that time. The people have had a satisfactory form of government now for all these years. It has never been the policy of the United States to carry business partnerships. There never was an insurance policy held upon any of its property by the Federal Government. There is not a public building here, including the Capitol, that has ever been insured. The Federal Government deems itself able to carry its own risks, and it has never patronized private corporations in the shape of insurance companies.

"I believe that Congress should fix the rate of taxation to be paid by the people who live in this city, without the slightest regard to its being the Capital of the country. I believe those taxes should be collected and covered into the Federal Treasury, and that every penny expended for the maintenance, ornamentation, extension, and development of the city of Washington should be appropriated directly out of the Federal Treasury.

"I know it is objected to by some that in that event probably Congress would be parsimonious in its appropriations and that the development and extension of the city upon broad plans would be halted. I have no sympathies with those apprehensions at all. I speak in the light of the experience of one who for a third of a century was a Member of one House or the other of Congress. I do not believe there is a more responsive set of men to public sentiment to be found in our country than those who are seated every two years in the House and every six years in the Senate. To charge a cheese-paring policy in its appropriations for this Federal Capital is to impeach the patriotism of 100,000,000 people, and I have no sympathy with that impeachment effort. I believe that the people of this District should pay a legitimate, fair taxation upon their holdings, that to be determined by Congress. The Constitution of the United States puts this District completely at the mercy of Congress, and I would not alter that condition if I could. I believe those taxes should go into the general fund of the Federal Treasury without any regard to the location here in Washington, and I believe that the Capital City should be maintained, enlarged, embellished, and developed by appropriations direct from the Federal Treasury.

"Until this partnership is dissolved, I see no way to escape the constantly recurring wrangles that you are treated to every time Congress meets and an appropriation bill for the District is considered. There naturally will be varying views held by Members of the House and Members of the Senate as long as this lasts. I think it eminently desirable to get rid of these constantly recurring clashes in Congress, and I confess my inability to discover any method by which they may be eliminated and avoided so long as you keep this partnership between the individual property holder in the District of Columbia and the Federal Government."

It is perfectly evident to my mind that the Capital can not be properly maintained under the half-and-half system. Under that system either the taxpayers must be overburdened with taxes or the necessary, the vital, interests of the city must be neglected in the future, as I shall show presently they have been in the past, under the system.

So much for the general principles that I think should control in dealing with the District. But there are other strong and controlling reasons why the partnership, the divided responsibility between the Government and the District, should be brought to a speedy termination. It has been anything but beneficial to the District, as I shall attempt to point out.

The whole question in the hearings and elsewhere has been presented entirely as a matter of dollars and cents. The Government has been placed in the unfortunate and humiliating position of trying to get rid of its responsibility to take care of its own Capital and shove it off onto somebody else. It has been met with the claim that if the half-and-half system is not continued, Congress will not appropriate money enough to properly carry on the affairs of the seat of government over which it has exclusive control. It was a nice spectacle for the American people. And more unfortunately still, this claim that the Government would, through its Congress, neglect to care for the Capital is not by any means without foundation. It did do it, as the hearings clearly disclosed, before the half-and-half system went into operation. It has continued to do it, however, while the half-and-half system has been in force, as I shall presently show. So the half-and-half system has not remedied the evil.

The question submitted to the committee by the bill which created it is also purely one of dollars and cents. The hearing proceeded upon that theory. The effect of the limitations of the half-and-half system on the moral and social conditions of the District and upon the means of preserving the health of its people received no consideration, and the neglect to preserve the beauty of the City of Washington, the regulation of its buildings, improvement of its streets and other important public works very little. So but little will be found in the record of the hearings on these important questions. But we are asked to give our reasons for the conclusions we reach on the main question submitted to us, and I am going to give some reasons that have led me to the conclusion that there should be no divided responsibility in dealing with the social and moral welfare of this Capital, and that the Government should assume the burden and be wholly responsibile for every interest of the people in the District and the managements of its affairs. I am going to call attention to some of the things that should have been done under the half-and-half system that have not been done. The proof of what I shall say will not be found in the hearings, but it is ample and satisfactory.

THE SLUMS.

The American people want their Capital to be clean, decent, respectable, and healthful, as well as beautiful on the outside. It has fallen far below this standard under a system of government where Congress can shift its responsibility onto the District of Columbia, a spineless and irresponsible municipal body. Under this system the slums, the red-light district, the saloons, and unwholesome and insanitary conditions have been allowed to flourish. Crime, vice, corruption, and death have devastated portions of the city that could and should have been protected from such conditions. From time to time feeble and ineffectual efforts have been made through inadequate laws to remedy these evils. The better class of people in the District have done the best they could with the insufficient weapons provided them by Congress to ameliorate the conditions and protect the poor people who suffer from them the most, but to a discouraging degree it has been a hopeless task. It is not wholly the fault of the people of the District that these conditions continue down to the present day. Neither is it the fault of the District officers. The chief reason for it is that Congress has failed to enact the laws and appropriate the money necessary to abate these crying evils, though often urged to do so.

In his message to the Fifty-ninth Congress President Roosevelt said:

"The National Government has control of the District of Columbia and should see to it that the City of Washington is made a model city in all respects, both as regards parks, public playgrounds, proper regulations of the system of housing so as to do away with the evils of alley tenements, a proper system of education, a proper system of dealing with truancy and juvenile offenders, a proper handling of the charitable work of the District. Moreover, there should be proper factory laws to prevent all abuses in the employment of women and children in the District."

Pursuant to this recommendation, the President appointed James Bronson Reynolds, of New York, to investigate conditions in the District and report to him, with such recommendations as suggested themselves to him. In his letter asking Mr. Reynolds to act as adviser in the matter he said:

"I wish your investigation to terminate in definite, practical recommendations to me with reference to the city's present needs and most notable defects, measured by the highest standards of good administration in this country and elsewhere."

I shall call attention to Mr. Reynolds's report and recommendations a little later. President Taft, dealing with this subject in his message to Congress of December 6, 1910, has this to say:

"Fair as Washington seems, with her beautiful streets and shade trees, and free, as the expanse of territory which she occupies would seem to make her, from slums and insanitary congestion of population, there are centers in the interior of squares where the very poor, and the criminal classes as well, huddle together in filth and noisome surroundings, and it is of primary importance that these nuclei of disease and suffering and vice should be removed, and that there should be substituted for them small parks as breathing spaces and model tenements having sufficient air space and meeting other hygienic requirements. The estimate for the reform of Willow Tree Alley, the worst of these places in the city, is the beginning of a movement that ought to attract the earnest attention and support of Congress, for Congress can not escape its responsibility for the existence of these human pest holes."

In pursuance of recommendations made by Mr. Reynolds, President Roosevelt appointed a commission of 15 of the leading citizens of Washington to deal with the subject.

That commission made a full and exhaustive report of conditions, with its recommendations. This report first quoted from Mr. Reynold's report, as follows:

"The report of Mr. James Bronson Reynolds, referred to in the President's letter as the basis of his action, is as follows:

"'REPORT ON THE HOUSING OF THE POOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ESPECIALLY IN RELATION TO INSIDE TENEMENTS.

"'As you directed me to give particular attention to the housing problem, I visited and examined between 350 and 400 tenements, shacks, and small houses in various sections of Washington and Georgetown and inspected numerous alleys. I talked with their occupants and conferred with many citizens of the District, both white and colored, including representatives of trade-unions, to obtain their views regarding housing conditions.

"'In my investigation I found three distinct problems—that of small houses, that of alley shacks and alley houses, and that of inside alleys.

* * * * * * *

"'I found nearly all the alley wooden shacks and small brick houses that I visited in a wretched condition. The wooden shacks, as a rule, might properly be condemned on structural grounds. Their yards were apparently storage places for refuse and filth, their water supply inadequate and badly placed, and the privies frequently only open boxes, and in many instances without covers, although the latter are required by the health ordinance. I am glad to state that during the past year many of these box privies have been removed.

"'I had conversation with the dwellers in these inside shacks, and the comments of many may be fairly summarized in the pathetic remark of an old colored woman, who exclaimed with reference to her neglected, filthy yard and privy, "Why, my old marsa wouldn't ha' kep' his horses stabled in such a place."'

"No argument is needed to show that such ill-conditioned hovels are culture beds of disease, the germs of which may be carried far and wide by the flies which feed on the rotting garbage and excreta. Their number should be promptly ascertained and immediate steps taken for their complete elimination, and buildings constructed in their places should have proper sanitary appurtenances and should open either upon a highway or small street.

* * * * * * *

"A particularly undesirable and menacing feature of the poor quarters of Washington is the inside alleys. These alleys are centers of disorder and crime, and they make possible the continuance of small communities uncontrolled by ordinary police inspection and unaffected by public observation and criticism. In my opinion, all inside alleys, with the exception of service alleys, should be abolished, and a definite scheme for the accomplishment of this object should be adopted.

* * * * * * *

"A law passed by the Congress in 1906 appropriated $50,000 for the expense of condemnation proceedings in the substitution of minor streets for alleys, but a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has interposed fresh difficulties by declaring unconstitutional the assumption of the law that the entire cost of opening small streets as substitutes for alleys should be assessed upon the adjacent property owners. I am not prepared to make any specific recommendations to meet this new difficulty, but to urge that it be not allowed to prevent the abolition of inside alleys."

The commission then proceeded to report the result of its own investigations, make recommendations, and point out the obstacles that prevented effective work, including reports of its subcommittees. From this long and exhaustive report I extract the following:

"A SERIOUS OBSTACLE TO THE CONVERSION OF ALLEYS INTO STREETS.

"The law passed July 22, 1892, and amended on August 24, 1894, prohibited the erection of dwellings in alleys less than 30 feet wide and imposed restrictions which hindered the building of any more alley houses. It also provided for the conversion of alleys into minor streets, but nothing of importance seems to have been done under this law until the committee on improvement of housing conditions took the matter up a year or more ago with a demand that the change be made in certain typical alleys. This led the commissioners to appoint a committee of District officials to advise them as to the opening of minor streets, and cases were taken up as rapidly as they could be properly handled until, up to the present time, the opening of 12 such streets has been recommended. Two of these have been confirmed by the courts and three other cases are pending in court. The commissioners are proceeding as rapidly as possible in the other cases, but the conflict with private interests led to litigation, and a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States on March 11 last, which declared it illegal to assess all the damages on certain property, as the law provides, unless it is found to be benefited to that extent. Although the commissioners are continuing to prepare and present cases they can not, under the law, approve the verdict in any case unless the benefits as assessed equal the damages and expenses."

* * * * * * *

Mr. Thompson, in his Housing Handbook, says of private enterprise:

"It has been assumed by thousands who ought to have known better that private enterprise, unstimulated, unregulated, unassisted, undirected, has hopelessly failed. It has left us face to face with a very deficient supply; it has given us the old slums; it has given us only often acres and acres of new slums in the suburbs, jerry-built 'brick boxes with slate lids' dumped down on dust heaps and put up mainly with the object of getting a quick profit in the few years which will elapse before they degenerate into slum dwellings almost as bad as the old ones in our midst. Where the new houses are well built and on good sites they are of an unsuitable type, and the rents are so unreasonably high as to be beyond the means of one family, so they have to be sublet to other families, and thus by overcrowding, with the increased wear and tear following in its train, they rapily deteriorate and leave the housing of the mass of the people as bad in many respects as it was before. The product of private enterprise, then, is insufficient in quantity and inferior in quality.

* * * * * * *

"In the report of the health officer for 1875 it was noted that during the year 699 houses were reported as unfit for human habitation and 198 condemned by the board. In 1876, 424 houses were reported and 371 condemned, and in the report of the board of health for 1877, page 46, we find:

"'No meaner cabins for temporary or permanent shelter can be found than some where wretched poor are born and exist and die in, here at the Capital of the United States. And, strange as it may seem, none so mean that they have not an owner mean enough to charge rent for them. Down in the alleys, below grade, with combination roof of tar, felt, shingles, rags, tin, gravel, boards, and holes; floors damp and broken; walls begrimed by smoke and age; so domiciled are families with all the dignity of tenants having rent to pay. The board has condemned 153 such during the past year and 958 during the past four years, of which probably 300 have been entirely demolished. But many owners still cling to the wrecks.

"'Our experience in dealing with filth, crowd poison, and disease among these people during the past four years has taught us that the great public economy, viz, the preservation of public health, is defeated by allowing these filthy, worthless, dependent classes of humanity to congregate in the alleys and byways out of sight, and therefore out of mind, until direful epidemic, incubated and nourished among them, spreads its black wings over the homes of the whole city. Better far to provide for the aged and sick in public institutions of charity, the vagrant in the chain gangs, let the cost be what it may, than to allow them to remain propagators of public disease, an incalculable expense to the District.'"

This report was made at the close of the year 1908.

In April, 1903, the Washington Post said editorily:

"WE HAVE SLUMS OF OUR OWN.

"An English gentleman, who is also a philanthropist and a student of sociology, has been looking into the slums of Washington. Ten years ago he visited the Capital, but on that occasion saw only our splendid public parks and beautiful private residences. (Just like a very large majority of Washingtonians and visitors.) He returned to England convinced that Washington was the long-looked-for model city. Now he pays a second visit, and this time he goes behind the scenes. The result of the investigation is an amendment to the gentleman's original estimate. He finds that while our areas of squalor and degradation are not as numerous or so extensive as those of London, they are in many instances much more appalling. On this point he says:

"'This time I came to see the worst that was to be seen, and it has been a revelation to me. I have seen rooms with half a dozen or more people living in them. I have seen buildings that would be condemned and torn down in London if they were inhabited only by a coster's donkey. Walls tumbling down, floors rotten, ceilings and walls falling in, little yards and outbuildings filled with rubbish and dirt, and absence of all sanitary arrangements. Within a stone's throw of the British Embassy, in an alley, there are hovels that are not fit for pigs to live in. Within the shadow of the Capitol there are others. On Factory Hill and in the holes around the canal in Georgetown there are frightful places full of filth and the direst poverty, where disease and crime must breed rapidly.'"

In December of that year Jacob Riis, in an address delivered at the First Congregational Church of Washington City, had this to say on the subject:

"I am not easily discouraged. But I confess I was surprised by the sights I have seen in the National Capital. You people of Washington have alley after alley filled with people you know nothing about. There are 298 such alleys. They tell me the death rate among the negro babies born in these alleys is 457 out of a thousand before they grow up to be 1 year old. Nearly one-half! Nowhere I have ever been in the civilized world have I heard of a death rate like that. Why, I have never seen places like those you have here. * * *

"To fight your slums you ought, first of all, to acquire the right to deal with the evil man who insists on murdering your babies. But you are sure to run against the old cry of 'Property rights.' One-half your children die in hovels before they reach the age of 1 year, because the owners would rather have 25 per cent profit than save their souls. For such a condition there's no defense. Where does the blame lie? With the owners of the slums, you will probably say. But it lies equally with the community which permits such a shameful and sinful condition of affairs to exist within its borders."

In commenting on this address the Washington Times said:

"This indictment of a community which has no slums; this astounding disclosure of a condition not paralleled by the squalor of New York or London or Paris was the key last night to one of the most remarkable meetings held in Washington in many years. It was the judgment of a trained mind delivered after a trip through the Capital and expressed with manly courage and plain speech to an assembly of representative Washingtonians."

Under a more recent date the Times, in an extended editorial on slum conditions, said:

"* * * The thing needed here is such an education of the commercial instinct that owners of houses in the poorer neighborhoods will cease to expect extraordinary percentages in their investments. * * * It has been proved by investigation that the poor can be comfortably housed in clean, sanitary dwellings which will pay from 7 to 10 per cent on the investment, if well managed. It has also been ascertained that the profits on much of the old-fashioned tenement and shanty property ran from 10 to 20 per cent and even higher. This means that a few property owners are content to make money at the cost of the poor and at the risk of endangering the whole community through the disease and filth bred in their property. The way in which this kind of piracy can be avoided lies, first, in strictly enforced laws which will prevent overcrowding and insanitary buildings absolutely." * * *

Now, let us see how far the conditions have improved since that time. During the year 1910 strenuous efforts were made to secure needed legislation and thus improve conditions which were fully disclosed at that time. Let me quote some of the things that were said of conditions as they then existed.

In an article in the Washington Times we find the following, quoting in part from remarks of Mr. E. W. Oyster, one of the good citizens here who has labored incessantly for better conditions in the District:

"Washington is honeycombed with filthy alleys, spreading disease in even the most beautiful parts of the city. Scattered through every residence section are slums more objectionable than the congested districts of New York or London. The health department is fighting a desperate losing battle against conditions too deep-rooted to be repaired without public aid.

"This was the warning that E. W. Oyster, of the Petworth Citizens' Association, hurled from the pulpit of the People's Church, East Capitol Street, yesterday morning.

* * * * * * *

"The people who own property in these slums," said Mr. Oyster, "are selling their souls for cash. And the tragedy of it is they are selling the lives of their own carefully guarded children for cash.

"I shall not criticize the health department, because I believe Dr. Woodward is an efficient officer, alive to the situation but terribly handicapped.

"The public is strangely indifferent. As a special examiner of the Pension Bureau I have had occasion to visit these places, and if the public could see them as I have seen them and as Dr. Woodward and his assistants have seen them, there would be a clamor for reform.

"We are spending millions making Washington beautiful—and it is beautiful. But what is beauty when it is rotten to the core?

* * * * * * *

"As it is the Capital of the Nation is a disgrace, with a death rate higher than even such cities as Denver, where we send our sick people too late to get them well.

"Behind the great mansions lay hovels that are natural disease breeders. In every part of this city, in the northwest as well as the southeast, citizens are being murdered through their own lack of interest and their own ignorance of what is going on behind their backs."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], in a statement made by him as published in the Washington Times of September 21, 1914, has this to say:

"To those familiar with the alley conditions in the city of Washington, no action in relation to the city's needs has been more imperatively needed than their elimination. If the good men and women knew of the actual conditions that exist within the shadow of the Nation's Capitol and realized the dangers to health and good morals that go out from them to all parts of the city the demand for their eradication would be universal except from those who profit from conditions that are a disgrace to civilization and Christianity. There would be no grumbling about how to do it nor would the rights of humanity be sacrificed for the rights of property.

"When the situation is understood there is not much basis except greed for opposition to what has been done. No substantial injury will be suffered by anyone. Any dwelling house lawfully on these alleys now has been there more than 20 years. The real annual profits from this property have been from 10 to 14 per cent, and so the owners have been paid for it more than twice over during that time. No property is confiscated. All these owners have to do is to change the use of their property or the conditions of use.

"If they make the alleys conform to the conditions of the law they can use their property for homes or business as they do to-day. They may be put to some expense, their excessive profits may be reduced, but their property will still be useful and profitable.

"Nothing more strikingly illustrates the power and influence of wealth and greed than the situation in regard to this alley problem. The public has been apathetic, business organizations composed of men of high standing have opposed this legislation unless the so-called rights of property owners are given the last farthing of protection, and the public health and safety and the pleadings of humanity have been subordinated to the financial interests or a few rapacious individuals.

"A few noble women interested themselves in the subject. They did splendid work, but it took the pleadings of a tender-hearted woman in an exalted place as she passed into the Valley of Death to bring action. Action has come, swift, sure, direct, complete, and the city of Washington, without its slums and unspeakable alley conditions, will be a fitting tribute and monument to the sweet nobility of Mrs. Wilson, who from her exalted place as the first lady of the land gave her time, strength, influence, and love for the happiness and comfort of the poor, lowly, and unfortunate, and whose last thoughts were not of her position but of poor, suffering humanity."

In a circular published by the Monday Evening Club, of Washington, in October, 1912, Thomas Jesse Jones, chairman of the housing committee of that club, has this to say:

"After 40 years of agitation and search for ways and means to eliminate the blind alleys of Washington, they still remain to spread crime and disease throughout the beautiful city and its inhabitants. Two startling facts should have swept these alleys out of existence years ago. One out of every three children born in these byways dies within the first year of life. To make matters worse these houses with their diseases and crime fill the center of many blocks rimmed with splendid houses and hotels.

"A glance at the map of Washington shows the dangerous proximity of these disease centers to the best residential blocks of the city.

"Some alleys have been eliminated to meet the demands of commercial enterprises. One disreputable place was converted into a minor street by assessments upon neighboring property equal to the cost involved in the change. Further application of this method was stopped by a Supreme Court decision in 1907 which cast doubt upon the legality of this form of assessment. At the last session of Congress $78,000 were voted for the change of the most notorious alley in the city into an inner park. This year the commissioners are planning to attack four more alleys.

"But in spite of all these accomplishments and plans, there is no plan to attack the problem as a whole. A careful study of the whole situation leads to the conclusion that the final solution of the alley problem awaits the aroused public interest of the Nation. Let us add to our plans for a city beautiful a demand for a city pure. Let the woman's clubs of the land, the civic associations of the Nation, and political organizations of every State and city unite in the call for a National Capital that shall be both beautiful without and clean within."

In the same circular Mr. Wilbur Vincent Mallalieu says:

"The moral conditions in such a secluded inclosure as this court can scarcely be imagined. The police who have to do with it agree in speaking of its disreputable character. One officer has remarked that it is the worst place in the United States and that there is no crime unknown to it. The police blotter of the precinct shows that from March 1, 1911, to March 1, 1912, there were 114 arrests among the 204 men, women, and children living in Snow's Court. The charges were drunkenness, disorderly conduct, assault, unlawful assembly, larceny, cruelty to animals, and accusations relating to sexual crimes. Nor does this number of cases represent all the evil because it does not take into account residents of Snow's Court arrested in other precincts, nor does it include the mischief done in Snow's Court by inhabitants of the neighboring alleys and residents of other parts of the city.

* * * * * * *

"Snow's Court is a peril to our Capital's life. Only an awakened public conscience that shall demand the abolition of this and other pest centers will rid the city of very grave dangers."

I might go on almost without limit quoting from the sayings of newspapers and others as of that date, condemning conditions and suggesting remedies, but I desist.

This showing should appeal strongly to Congress for relief.

In a directory of the inhabited alleys, issued as late as 1912, it is said by way of introduction:

"There are 275 of these interior courts in the city. They contain 3,337 houses used for dwellings and approximately 16,000 persons. They are so widely distributed throughout the city that even the best residential sections are not free from their evil influences. The northwest, the largest of the four general sections of the city, has 161 or nearly three-fifths of all the alleys.

"The statement which follows shows the number of alleys and alley houses for each section of the city.

Section.	Alleys.	Houses.
Northwest	161	1,940
Southwest	58	705
Northeast	30	336
Southeast	26	356
Total	275	3,337

"The average for each alley is 12.1 houses and 58.1 persons. Each alley house has an average of 4.8 persons."

Now, let us see what Congress has done to remedy or ameliorate these fearful conditions. In a pamphlet published by the committee on housing of the woman's welfare department of the National Civic Federation in November, 1912, it was recited:

"This first health board, which had begun its work of alley reclamation so nobly, was abolished, and the office of health officer created by an act of Congress June 11, 1878. Right here the good work stopped, for in the legalization of the health ordinances in 1880 the section under which the health department acted in the condemnation of insanitary buildings was omitted. Whether this omission was an oversight or was secured by the influence of men whose money interests were at stake is not known, but it was 12 long years before any further remedial legislation was enacted, and during those years no houses were condemned and new houses were constantly erected. Alley property had proved a paying investment and brick had succeeded wood as building material."

In 1892 an act was passed by Congress authorizing the commissioners to "condemn, open, extend, widen, or straighten alleys on the petition of the owners of more than one-half of the real estate in the square in which such alley is sought to be opened, etc."

Congress very magnaminously provided in this act that the whole of the expenses of such improvements should be assessed against the property owners in the square to be affected. By an act passed in 1894 the provisions of the act were extended to minor streets of a width of not less than 40 or more than 60 feet in width.

It goes without saying that these statutes amounted to practically nothing as a means of ridding the city of the evils I am considering.

By an act passed in 1906 a board for the condemnation of insanitary buildings was created and authorized to investigate and destroy or repair such buildings. This has resulted in the destruction of some of the buildings in these alleys, but it has wholly failed to reach the heart of the evil and has accomplished very little of good in respect of the slum evil.

In 1914 an act was passed making it unlawful "to erect, place, or construct any dwelling on any lot or parcel of ground fronting on an alley where such alley is less than 30 feet wide throughout its entire length and which does not run straight to and open on two of the streets bordering on the square and is not supplied with sewer, water mains, and gas and electric light."

The intention of this act was good and it is good as far as it goes, but that is a very short distance. It only prevents the construction of additional buildings in some of the alleys, which amounts to but little as a means of putting an end to evils that have existed for many years.

On March 3, 1915, another well-intentioned act was passed "to incorporate the Ellen Wilson memorial homes." This was a fitting memorial to a good woman, whose generous and sympathetic heart went out in sympathy to the unfortunates who were denied the comforts of sanitary homes. But as a practical means of rendering the help she so much desired them to have it will amount to nothing of permanent good. The work of correcting this great evil can not be delegated to private individuals. If it is ever done and done effectually, it must be done by the Government and with its money, as I shall endeavor to point out further along.

There was one other act that was effective to destroy one of the worst of these slum alleys. It was the act to condemn Willow Tree Alley. In this instance the Government generously put up half of the money necessary to accomplish this commendable result. But even this beneficent effort has largely failed of its object, because instead of opening out the alley to the sunlight and the public gaze it has been turned into an inside or inclosed park that has become the rendezvous of criminals, vagabonds, and the immoral and viciously disposed of the poorer classes that calls for police and sanitary inspection and control which is not always supplied.

In a report of the committee on improvement of existing houses and elimination of insanitary and alley houses of the President's Home Commission above mentioned, made December 8, 1908, some of the existing conditions are described, and the difficulties of dealing with them effectually are pointed out.

For example, in speaking of one of the objectionable alleys, it is said:

"One of these cases is Blagden's Alley, square 368, concerning which the chief of police and his associates on the board states in the recommendation for its conversion into a minor street that:

"'Blagden's Alley, located between Ninth and Tenth and M and N Streets, contains 54 houses inhabited by a negro element who live in poverty and are a source of constant trouble. The dwellings are insanitary and dilapidated and afford shelter to 10 or 12 persons each.'

"Another is square 620, as to which the board reported:

"'Logan's Place contains 35 insanitary dwellings, which are very much overcrowded, and the inhabitants, being of a vicious character, give the police more or less trouble.'

"Everyone familiar with these and other such labyrinths realizes the security from police supervision which they afford, to say nothing of other disadvantages which fully justified the recommendation of the board."

Then it was said:

"The principal difficulty with the present law seemed to be that it required that an amount equal to the damages found should be assessed as benefits and that this should be assessed within a limited area. It was found that the law of 1906 in relation to the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of streets, provided that the jury should assess benefits not only upon adjoining and abutting property, but upon any and all other lots, pieces, or parcels of land which the jury might find to be benefited by the improvement. This apparently indicated a plan by which the amounts required could be raised in a more equitable manner, but as it seemed probable that in many cases the damages awarded would even then exceed the benefits which the jury might find it seemed desirable to include also a provision by which a certain proportion of the awards could, if necesary, be paid out of some general fund.

"One of the commissioners has suggested, when the engineer commissioner recommended that the work be stopped on account of the expense, that legislation might be urged providing that the alleys be opened and a certain proportion of the expense be paid by the United States Government, another proportion by the District government, and the remainder be assessed upon the property owners in the neighborhood of the improvement. Inasmuch as the deplorable conditions of the alleys have grown up under the administration of the District government, it seems proper that a considerable portion of the expense of removing them should be borne in this way by those responsible for them; but as any payment for District purposes by the Federal Government would be contrary to the definite policy adopted by Congress it did not seem advisable to the committee to advocate such a provision."

The picture presented by the quotations I have made is not overdrawn. They do not disclose the whole truth. I have not depended on such information in reaching conclusions. I have examined enough of these slums and inspected enough of the dwellings located in them to speak of my own knowledge. The conditions are unspeakably bad. One who witnesses them for the first time is filled with a profound sense of pity and commisseration for the inmates not unmixed with a feeling of shame and resentment that a great Nation like this, one of the richest and most powerful in the world and possessed of almost unlimited resources, should allow such conditions to exist in its Capital City.

Washington is a city of striking and abrupt contrasts. One may ride along a wide, well-paved, and attractive street lined with beautiful, almost palatial, homes and turn from it upon an old, worn-out cobblestone or brick paved street lined with old, broken-down houses, many of them dilapidated and apparently unfit for human habitation. From that one can turn into what are politely called "inhabited alleys," "courts," "places," and find an appalling condition of poverty, destitution, and degradation. All this within a distance of two or three squares. Some of these alleys are blind alleys—that is to say, there is but one means of ingress and egress—and within is a labyrinth of alleys covering the entire inside of a square, with a fringe of houses around the outside, some of them little better than those within except that they are easier of access.

Within such a square you find the most degrading conditions. It is almost beyond belief that human beings can live under such conditions. They have very justly been called pest holes of crime and disease; and yet the owners of the shacks and tumbled-down and insanitary houses are making more money out of the rent of them than is being made by the owners of first-class houses and business blocks. The rents are exorbitantly high. As an example, I visited one little old brick shanty with two small rooms up and two down stairs, without running water in the house, out of repair, plaster off the walls, ill-lighted and poorly ventilated. This house was occupied by two families, each with two rooms, for which they paid $7 a month each, or $14 for this little, dilapidated, insanitary house that should have been condemned and destroyed under existing laws long since.

There is but one effective remedy for this dreadful condition. The Government should condemn the whole square as a sanitary measure and police regulation, tear everything out of it, root and branch, replat the ground, construct upon it model sanitary houses, rent them to the poorer classes of people who now inhabit the slums, and then supervise and inspect them, thus compelling the tenants to keep them in a sanitary condition inside as well as out. It will be said that all this will cost a lot of money. Yet, it will; but it will be money much better spent than are millions and millions of dollars that we are now throwing away for useless and illegal purposes. The Agricultural Department is spending and wasting millions and millions of dollars on useless experiments and in work that should be done by the States and can not legitimately be done by the National Government. The Public Health Service is spending millions more in the States in violation of the spirit of the Constitution. We are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for the cure of hogs and cattle in the States often where the Federal authorities have no lawful right or business to enter. We spend millions for agricultural colleges and vocational schools in the States, a work that belongs to and should be left to the States. We are spending money lavishly, extravagantly, and paternally in the States. The dividing lines between the States and the Federal Government are fast disappearing by the raid of the States on the National Treasury. The States are selling their jurisdiction and their sovereignty for money. We are centralizing our Government at an alarming rate and to a degree that I am afraid few appreciate, and for purely mercenary and selfish reasons. The pork barrel is kept well filled. We are spending millions of dollars for public buildings in the States that are not needed and for the improvement of so-called rivers and creeks that are of no public use. No wonder the National Treasury is bankrupt and the people are being taxed to keep up these many illegitimate and useless expenditures. But when an effort is made to clean up the National Capital, that is within the jurisdiction of the Government and for which it is directly responsible, the purse strings are tightly drawn and the cheese paring begins. The half-and-half system is appealed to as a reason and excuse for economy. And if the half-and-half system is adhered to it may just as well be conceded now, once for all, that this necessary improvement can not be accomplished. The one-half of the money necessary for the initial work can not be raised by taxation. It would be ruinous. And so long as the Government hides itself behind the half-and-half system and contents itself by meeting one-half of the expenses, the conditions in the Capital will continue as they are now, a disgrace and a reproach to the Nation.

These are conditions that should not be allowed to exist for a day in any city in a civilized country, much less in the capital of a great nation like ours. But, it will be asked, what is the remedy? The remedy is simple and easy, but expensive. The Government should take the matter vigorously in hand. As I have said, it should condemn and clean out these alleys at whatever cost. But it should not stop when it has turned these poor people out of their homes, however poor and unsanitary they are. It should provide other homes for them at reasonable rents, to be under the inspection and control of the Government. This could be done as a matter of public safety and a sanitary measure. This duty of providing homes for the poor and incompetent within the Capital should not be left to private enterprises seeking profits. Neither the cost nor the responsibility should be divided with anybody. To assess the damages resulting from such sanitary improvements to private owners of property is entirely unreasonable and wholly unjust. Our civic pride as well as our sense of justice should impel us to act in this matter promptly and effectively. It has been done in other countries. It can and should be done in this country within its Capital, over which it has exclusive control.

Of the means resorted to in London, England, and its results the report of the housing committee, above referred to, has this to say:

"The housing of the working classes act, which was passed in 1890, and which superseded and improved previous attempts in this connection, provided not only that individual houses might be condemned as insanitary, as is done under the law of 1906 here, but also that an area containing streets and many houses might be declared 'unhealthy' and taken over by the local authority, and that the buildings might be removed, the streets rearranged, and other dwellings erected, either by agencies to which money would be furnished by the local authority or, if necessary, by the local authorities themselves. In fact, the law made it obligatory upon the local authority in London to provide housing accommodations for at least 50 per cent of the people displaced, which has since been raised by an amendment making the required provision equal to all, and in other districts to such an amount as might be determined by the local authority to be adequate under all the circumstances.

"Under this housing of the working classes act numerous wretched districts have been cleared up and comfortable and healthy dwellings provided, and although the cost to the community has been considerable in certain cases where the evils to be remedied were of long standing and very great, the law has done great good and the attention of those interested in the subject is being given to improving its operation rather than to changing it in any radical way. It aims, so far as possible, to protect the interest of the community in acquiring any property which has become detrimental to the well-being of the district, while at the same time dealing justly with the owners. The method of procedure requires the local authority to take the initiative, and where a loan is necessary, as it often is where an area is acquired, the plans for this and for the improvement of the area must be approved by the central authority in London."

And comparing the conditions there with ours, it is said further:

"It will be noticed that the situation in the District of Columbia is similar to that in England, in that the District government resembles the local authority, which can take the initiative in regard to any alleys which require attention, but which can not act without the consent of an authority not local, which in the case of the District is Congress.

"The ordinary danger in giving to public officials who are in entire control considerable discretion in the disbursement of public funds is therefore removed, and it ought to be possible for Congress to give such a plan a fair trial without incurring any very great risk."

The following, published in the Trades Unionist, is worthy of careful consideration:

"That the United States Government should make Washington the model for all cities of the country was the opinion of the delegates to the National City Planning Conference, which met in this city on May 22, 1909. It was the consensus of opinion of the delegates to this conference that the working out of the plans for the beautification along practical lines rather than for mere adornment should be the ideal worked for by all American cities in order that all classes of people shall be benefited.

"One of the speakers at the opening session of the conference was Robert A. Pope, landscape architect of New York City. He said:

"'Of prime importance to the growth of the city-planning movement in America is the realization of its true nature, its proper aim, its vast social and economical import. Because of ignorance of the true scope of city planning work in this country has not and can not, as at present understood, accomplish its primary function.

"'For example,' he said, 'we have assumed without question that the first object of city planning is to beautify. We have made the esthetic an objective in itself. We have rushed to plan showy civic centers of gigantic cost, the carrying out of which too often has been brought about by civic vanity, when pressing hard by we see the almost unbelievable congestion, with its hideous brood of evil, filth, disease, degeneracy, and crime. What external adornment can make truly beautiful such a city? Is it genuine foresight to neglect the present-day serious and fast-growing evils of congestion and bad housing which is so directly a menace to future generations—

"'To forestall the disastrous and otherwise inevitable consequences of these conditions will be the richest service that city planning can accomplish for the future. That this is its true and primary function can be abundantly established. The example of European countries, especially that of Germany, demonstrates that wise city planning, with proper regulations, can alleviate and ultimately eradicate undue congestion, the festering source of most of our disease, crime, and degeneracy. To remedy congestion, then, is to help solve some of our most threatening social and economic problems.'

"'The foregoing statement in regard to city planning and city management are probably true of all cities and are certainly true of Washington.

"'What external adornment can make truly beautiful such a city?' The Washington Times appears to have anticipated Mr. Pope's question when it said editorially:

"'No part of the greater Washington can be safely built upon a rotten foundation. There is no room in the city for such contrasts as foul alleyways and a parking system embracing the beauties of a paradise. The spirit that labors for the realization of the beautification project should at the same time strive for the elimination of the slum quarters.'

"The Washington Post says our alleys are 'pest holes'; Rev. J. M. Waldron, president of the Alley Improvement Association, brands them as 'plague spots'; President Roosevelt declared them 'a reproach to the Capital City'; and Senator McMillan 'a disgrace to our civilization.'

"'What external adornment can make truly beautiful such a city?'—a city honecombed with disease-breeding, death-dealing, and crime-producing slums. Jacob Riis says they are worse than any he ever saw in New York City or in London, and Washington's death rate, when compared with that of the cities named and nearly all the other cities of its class in the United States and Europe, seems to prove the truth of his statement.'"

If Congress will abolish the "local authority" here known as the District of Columbia, which is a mere incumbrance, and the half-and-half system and deal with this awful condition directly and with a free hand, the conditions can be eliminated from the life of the Capital, as they should be.

There can be no possible excuse for them to remain. It is a shame to every American citizen that they have been allowed to exist at all.

RED-LIGHT DISTRICT.

For 30 years, under the system of government that has prevailed here, the red-light district, with all its demoralizing influence, corruption, vice, disease, and crime was allowed to grow and flourish within a stone's throw of Pennsylvania Avenue, the thoroughfare leading from the Capitol to the White House, and almost under the shadow of the Capitol itself. It was only within the last two years that a law was enacted by Congress removing this blot from the face of the city. And even then no remedial provisions to aid the poor unfortunates who inhabited this section was made. They were simply evicted from the only place of habitation they had and left to seek other homes as best they could. Doubtless many of them will be found in the slums or inhabited alleys and others more fortunate in the better resident portions of the city. Their vices and their misfortunes are hidden from public view, which is something, but not much. These unhappy victims of the baser passions of men need something more than this at the hands of a Government that has forcibly evicted them from the only homes they had.

Some of the good and generous women of Washington made praiseworthy efforts to ameliorate their condition at the time of their eviction, but with what success I do not know. But, at all events, the effort was not official and no aid was given them by the Government.

THE SALOONS.

Another kindred and debasing evil that has been nourished by this government of divided authority and divided responsibility is the liquor saloons. They still flourish unmolested and unashamed. Business men of Washington, too many of them, support and uphold them and antagonize any proposed law to suppress or control them, because they say to eliminate the saloon will hurt business. Not a very high standard of morality or citizenship, you will say. No; it is not, but it is the standard of commercialism, greed, and slavery to business as against every consideration of decency or good morals. Civic organizations in the city, which should be controlled by the highest standard of civic virtue and worthy citizenship, composed, in part at least, of men of high character, who cry out for a beautiful Capital City, stand opposed to the destruction of this, one of the greatest of evils. There is one partial excuse for this in respect of the action of some, at least, of these associations. Their membership is composed partly, sometimes largely, of brewers, saloon keepers, and others interested directly or indirectly in the liquor traffic and sometimes officered by such as these. Of course, such men, interested as they are, are active and energetic, always present at meetings, and frequently control meetings in the interest of the saloons as against members who are not directly interested and many of whom have not the moral courage to speak or vote their real sentiments and convictions.

When I came into the Senate there were over 500 liquor saloons in the District of Columbia. Fifty-seven of them were on Pennsylvania Avenue between the Capitol and the White House, as many as nine of them on a square in some instances. They infected the residence districts of the city and nestled about the schools and churches. At the last Congress a bill was introduced reducing the number of saloons to 300, excluding them from the residence districts, and providing more stringent control and regulation of them. The bill was strenuously opposed in committee. It was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia and passed the Senate practically without opposition. In the House it was held in committee for months and could not be brought to a vote. It was finally passed by making it an amendment to the District appropriation bill, which forced a vote upon it.

The law has not accomplished all that was intended by or expected from it. The administration or maladministration of it by the excise board was so obviously bad that an investigation of the board was ordered by the Senate which resulted in a report of a committee strongly condemning the course of the excise board. It was made evident that the board was unduly favorable to the liquor interests and construed and misconstrued the law in favor of the liquor interests and against the public welfare and good morals of the District.

Here, again, there should be no divided authority or responsibility. This is a matter that interests and affects the whole country. It is a disgrace to the Nation that such conditions should be allowed to exist in its Capital City. The Congress should deal with it directly, promptly, and effectively. There should be no intervening local authority or local fears or sentiment to obstruct or hinder the complete elimination of the liquor traffic from the Capital of the Nation. Many of the States of the Union have abolished the saloon and established prohibition; others are moving forward to the same highly desirable result. The Federal Government should not be lagging behind in this great forward movement for the betterment of mankind.

POLICE STATIONS.

Another of the evils prevailing in the city that needs undivided and prompt action is its insanitary condition, not confined to the slums or poorer sections. The health, as well as the morals of the city, needs to be better safeguarded and protected than it has been in the past under the present half-and-half system of financing the affairs of the District.

The police stations of the District may be taken as an example of dangerous neglect to protect the health of the city. They are not all so bad as they might be, but some of them that I have visited are shockingly insanitary. They are poorly lighted and wretchedly ventilated. They are unfit for the police force to live and work in, and the cells, where human beings are confined before trial, sometimes innocent men, are unspeakably insanitary. For years efforts have been made to secure appropriations sufficient to provide better and more sanitary station houses, but they have been only partially successful. These antiquated and insanitary buildings are still maintained, to the everlasting reproach of a civilized nation that boasts of a beautiful capital and talks about making it a model city.

In the Washington Star of August 2, 1910, Dr. William C. Woodward, District health officer, is quoted as follows:

"I have gone as far as my power will permit. For the past two years I have recommended that immediate improvements be made in a number of the police stations and that the deplorable insanitary conditions which exist there be corrected. Maj. Sylvester has reechoed these recommendations and has given them his hearty support.

"Nothing has been done. I have no power to go further. I have absolutely no power to compel the commissioners to do anything. The conditions which prevail are open and notorious, but the health office is not to blame. It has gone the limit. The whole matter is up to the commissioners."

The doctor was mistaken in saying it was up to the commissioners. These improvements can not be made without money, and Congress has failed to appropriate the amounts necessary to correct this condition. The things that are absolutely and imperatively needed, some of which I am endeavoring to bring to the attention of Congress, can not be accomplished under the half-and-half system without imposing an unbearable burden of taxation on the taxpayers of the District. If it could under this system, the commissioners are hindered by law in making estimates for the expenses of the District to double the amount of the estimated revenue that can be raised by taxation; that is to say, the estimates are limited by the amount raised by taxation and can not exceed the amount thus supplied plus the one-half assumed by the Government. Such a system by which the hands of the commissioners are tied and the liability of the Government limited has been a dead weight on the prosperity, the morals, and the health of the city. This work of proper sanitation is the Government's problem. It should not shirk it. The amount contributed by taxation, whether one-half or more or less, should have nothing to do with it.

ENGINE HOUSES.

The engine and truck houses of the District are subject to the same criticism as the police stations, though probably not in so great a degree. The truck house in front of the Senate Office Building that has been uncovered and exposed to public view by the tearing down of the houses around it, is a sample of some of these that we have no reason to be proud of. Fortunately, its destruction is made necessary by the conversion of the ground that it stands upon into a public park and a better, more modern, and more sanitary one is promised in its place. But there are others equally in need of attention.

Some of them are infinitely worse than this one. I have visited and inspected a number of the engine and truck houses. There are 38 of them in all. One of them was constructed 58 years ago, another 51, and some over 40 years ago. But very few of them are up-to-date, modern engine houses. Many of them are insanitary in the extreme and most of them are inadequate for the purpose and inadequately equipped.

The firemen are a fine looking body of men, but a large proportion of them are compelled to live and work in quarters that are a disgrace to the city and the Nation. Let me describe one of the houses that is much the same as a number of others. The engine room, where the engine and other equipments are located and where the horses and men are quartered, consists of one room, too small for the purpose. The front space is occupied by the engine and other fire apparatus. Immediately back of this are the horses, in open stalls, extending clear across the room and immediately back of the horses, without any partition between them, and occupying a narrow strip of only a few feet, extending also across the room, the men are quartered. Literally the men live in the stable with the horses. The dormitory, or sleeping room, is upstairs. The whole building is heated, or partially heated, with one old cannon stove. There is no system for heating the entire building and no hot water for the use of the men in the different parts, the old stove being the only means of heating the building or water. The rooms are lighted by gas only. There is no side or rear entrance. Everything that goes in or out must pass through the one room at the front. All of the accumulations of the stable are taken out that way and the coal and other supplies are brought in in the same way. As the stalls of the horses take up a section entirely across the room and the men are located behind them, no one can pass through without crowding past a horse in his stall or the horse being taken out. When fuel or other necessaries are brought in it is sometimes necessary to run the engine out in the streets to make passage room. The building is miserably lighted and ventilated. At one of the engine houses, where they had no heat except from the one stove, I asked the captain if they could be kept warm by that means in cold weather, and he said no; that at night the man on watch in the room where the stove was situated had to wear a heavy coat in order to keep warm.

The house I am describing is next to intolerable in warm weather. As I have said, it is practically without ventilation. There can be no circulation of air for the reason I have stated that there are no rear or side openings. The engine that is in front of the men and the horses and between them and the only entrance for fresh air, must be kept heated and ready to go out at all hours. Just imagine, if you can, what hot weather, such as we have in Washington, means to men who have to live in a stable with a row of six horses in front of them and a heated engine in front of the horses and no ventilation from the rear. The conditions under which firemen are compelled to live in many of the engine houses of the Capital of the Nation are positively inhuman. They must live under these fearful conditions day and night, winter and summer, unprotected either from heat or cold. In addition to what I have said of the arrangement, heating, and ventilating of the houses, the buildings themselves are old, out of repair, and dilapidated.

I have perhaps said enough about the buildings. I might say much more about them. Now a word about the equipment.

The fire department is well equipped with a fine class of horses. As I have said, the men, as I saw them, seem to me to be high-class men. The chief of the department has served for 37 years and has come up from the bottom. He is a highly intelligent and capable man. But these men are handicapped by an altogether out-of-date and inadequate equipment. The day of the horse as a moving power in a fire department has passed. A fire department without motor-propelled apparatus is far behind the times and inadequate and inefficient. Besides, the replacing of the horses with motor power would render the engine houses more habitable. They would not, at least, be stables with the men living with the horses. The engine and truck houses should be equipped with motor apparatus without delay. Besides the increase of efficiency and betterment of sanitary condition it would, as has been estimated, insure a saving to the Government as between the horses and motor power of over $40,000 a year.

In a letter to me from the chief engineer of the department, after describing some of the conditions of the buildings, he says:

"Some of the greatest needs in our houses are the installation of proper heating plants to replace stoves, electric lighting as a substitute for gas, and shower baths."

Out of the large number of engine houses in the city only four or five are properly built and equipped. After seeing a number of objectionable ones I visited one of those lately built. The contrast was most gratifying. It was made with back and front entrances, lighted and ventilated from all sides, steam heated, with hot and cold water throughout, comfortable quarters up and down stairs for the men, away from the horses, with motor-power apparatus, and in every way sanitary, comfortable for the men, and up to date.

You may ask why the houses are not put in sanitary condition and properly equipped. Just because Congress will not, under the half-and-half, irresponsible system that exists, provide the money necessary even to make ordinary and necessary repairs much less build modern, sanitary engine houses properly equipped.

I do not know whether members of the District appropriation committees have visited and examined these houses as I have. I can not believe that if they had these necessary and humane appropriations would not have been made long since. It should be made the duty of that committee and the Committees of the two Houses on the District of Columbia to make a personal inspection of all public buildings at least once a year so that they might know their needs from their own personal knowledge.

The men of the police and fire departments are the guardians of the life and property of the people of the District. They should be supplied with all that is necessary to make them comfortable and with adequate facilities and equipment for efficient and faithful service.

HOSPITALS.

The District of Columbia has a combined jail, insane hospital, and asylum hospital for the dependent people who are unable to pay for treatment at the private hospitals. These three are on the same piece of ground. There used to be a workhouse and a poorhouse connected with them. Through the most strenuous efforts of the commissioners, the Board of Charities, and other charitable organizations and private citizens other provisions have been made for a workhouse and an asylum for the aged and infirm, commonly called a poor farm, which I will notice further along, but the old hospital remains to disgrace the city and the Nation. It is composed of a number of cottages worn with age, poorly equipped, and unfit for use from age and decay. It is just about such a pretense of a hospital that one would expect to find under a system of government that would allow the slum conditions which I have mentioned to exist. For 15 years the Government has owned a suitable tract of land upon which to erect a modern hospital, such as a city of this size should have. Ever since Congress has been appealed to for an appropriation sufficient to erect such a building, but the land remains vacant. It was a fine real estate investment. The property has a speculative value of five times as much as it cost, but that does not care for the needy, sick, and afflicted.

While this imperative duty has been neglected by Congress from year to year it has been making appropriations of hundreds of thousands of dollars to privately owned hospitals, some of which needed no help but were growing rich from their business. For this neither the Government nor the class of people that it should serve have received any benefit whatever. Most of the indigent patients they refuse to receive at all, and if they do accept any the Government, notwithstanding its conribution, must pay for them.

At the hearings on the District appropriation bill for 1915 the following showing was made as to appropriations for private hospitals:

Freedman's Hospital	$665,521.23
Providence Hospital	465,079.67
Garfield Hospital	279,830.00
Columbia Hospital	276,600.00
National Homeopathic Hospital	126,168.62
Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital	103,708.00
Children's Hospital	50,000.00
Grand total	1,966,907.52

Thus it will be seen that while the people of the District have been suffering for years for a decent municipal hospital, the Government has donated to private hospitals nearly $2,000,000.

The Municipal Lodging Hospital, like the Washington Asylum Hospital, is nothing less than a disgrace to any decent city. It is located in cramped, insanitary quarters in an old recidence on Twelfth Street NW., a building pronounced by all who have visited it as utterly unfit for the purposes to which it is devoted. And the influence of the owners of these same private hospitals and their friends, including some of the subservient newspapers, has been successfully used to prevent the construction of a decent modern up-to-date hospital.

What the Government should have in the city of Washington is a first-class modern hospital to care for the unfortunates that it is now caring for so indifferently and inadequately, and others needing its help. It should have a receiving and emergency hospital with all modern improvements and adequately equipped. It should at once and for all time cut off all appropriations to private hospitals. It is a misuse of public funds for which there is no proper consideration or return.

The Government hospital should be free to all kinds of practitioners of all schools of medicine and other means of healing, leaving the patients free to select their own means of healing if they have any choice. It should in that way be made one means of breaking up the existing medical monopoly, one of the worst and most oppressive of all the great trusts and monopolies of the whole country.

PARKS.

The District of Columbia has good reason to be proud of her parks. Most of them are very small, and Rock Creek Park, the largest of them all, has not been made what it should be in the interest of the whole people. It is essentially a rich man's park. It is beautiful because nature made it so and not by the expenditure of money by the Government or the District. It has been made available to people who can afford their automobile or carriage by beautiful drives. The acquisition and improvement of the park is to be highly commended, but its advantages and the pleasure to be derived from it are confined to a comparatively few people, who really need it the least. The same may be said of Potomac Park. There are no buildings, no playgrounds, no stadiums, no places of recreation, no place where the people are provided with any conveniences for meeting together to listen to music or enjoy other sources of amusement or pleasure in Potomac or Rock Creek Parks. They are not accessible to the general public by any cheap means of travel, and only long-distance pedestrians are able to see or enjoy them on foot. If the parks are intended and designed exclusively as beautiful driveways they are a great success, but if they are intended for the enjoyment of the general public, as I think they should be, they need much to make them suitable and accessible for such a purpose. In this respect they do not compare with the parks of other large cities in area, accessibility, and fitness for park purposes.

In the thickly populated down-town sections of the city ample and beautiful small parks and circles, which may be called parks, are provided and are well kept up; but, unfortunately, there this much-desired provision for outdoor pleasure and fresh air and sunshine stops. While provision has been made for the extension of all streets to the outer sections of the District on the broad lines of the plan of the original city of Washington, no provision has been made for parks, large or small, in these outside sections that are fast coming into the city and becoming thickly populated. This is a serious oversight. The people residing in these sections need the open parks even more than most of the people down town because of the inaccessibility to them of the larger parks, the resort of the people who ride in their automobiles. These people pay their share of the taxes used for the acquisition and upkeep of the larger and the down-town parks and should have local parks of their own, and this will not be made a model city until this is done.

It is maintained by some that it is unfair to tax the people for one-half of the expense of acquiring and keeping up an unusually large and expensive park system for the Capital, but this claim is unfounded. The park system of the District of Columbia does not compare with that of some, I think many, of the other cities of the country in area, beauty, availability, or usefulness and benefit to the general public, nor has it cost so much either to acquire or maintain. A comparison of the park system here and in other cities in the States was not furnished at the hearings. I have not attempted to secure information as to all other cities, but I have as to some. I give a few of them as examples:

	Acres.
Washington, D. C	5,500.00
Boston, Mass	2,575.00
Philadelphia, Pa	5,621.00
Pittsburgh, Pa	1,321.63
Baltimore, Md	2,320.65
San Francisco, Cal	1,398.00
Los Angeles, Cal	4,000.00

This will show, I think, that the park areas in Washington, if we exclude the many small parks and circles included in the area in this city, are not unusually large as compared with other cities in the country, because it is the Capital of the Nation, or for any other reason.

THE STREETS.

There are some peculiar conditions that have arisen respecting the streets and street improvements that may well be called to the attention of Congress. The streets in Washington are unusually wide and greater in number than in any other city in the country, so far as I am informed. This resulted from the elaborate way in which the city was laid out as the Capital of the country. I think this was entirely proper and has tended to enhance the beauty of the city. But for this the owners of property should not be penalized by the imposition of higher taxes or special assessments for the opening, widening, or improvement of the streets. This has been done, however, and is provided for now by law. To meet the expenses of opening a street—that is, condemning and opening it legally and on paper—the cost is assessed against abutting property. The owners must pay the assessments, often burdensome, sometimes ruinous, at once, while the street thus condemned may not be opened and put in actual use for months or even years later. This is entirely unreasonable and unjust. This is only an example. There are other assessments for public improvements. In my judgment, under the circumstances, there should be no assessments upon private property for public improvements. It is practically conceded that, by reason of its being the Capital and the great interest the Government has in maintaining it, the privately owned property should not bear the whole burden of the ordinary expenses of the District. Hence the half-and-half compromise. I am firmly convinced that this is so, and because of that fact, and the other facts that I have mentioned, I submit that the Government, after receiving the general taxes from the private property owners, should exact no more in special assessments, or otherwise, for street improvements or maintenance. But this is not quite the worst. When it was seen that new additions to the city would be laid out beyond its original limits and that streets might be laid out without conforming them to the general street system, some of the enterprising and public-spirited citizens prepared, and had introduced in Congress, a bill to extend throughout this outside territory the system of streets already provided for within the old city limits. This was obviously necessary if the beauty and symmetry of the city plan was to be preserved. But it was with the greatest difficulty that the passage of the bill was secured, and it was finally passed with the condition that the whole expense of thus laying out the streets should be borne by the people of the District. It was a stroke of economy that does not appeal to one's sense of justice or propriety.

In fact, there has been apparent, through all the years that the half-and-half system has been in operation, a disposition to burden the taxpayers of the District with expenses that should have been borne by the Government. It was a penny-wise-pound-foolish policy that has been exceedingly hurtful to the District and unjust to the taxpayers. It is the strongest kind of argument in favor of abolishing the District and making the Government directly and alone responsible for all improvements and expenses within its Capital.

PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

I take up Pennsylvania Avenue separately because it is unique and deserves especial attention and more heroic treatment. If one who had read about the magnificent thoroughfare of the National Capital could see it for the first time from the steps of the Capitol Building looking down toward the White House, his illusion about it would be rudely dispelled. Aside from its extreme width and, in that respect, imposing appearance, there is nothing in the Avenue to excite the pride of an American citizen. It was laid out and intended as an imposing and superb thoroughfare between the Capitol Building and the White House, something like a mile apart. But, unfortunately, the Government neglected to preserve in itself the title to the lands bordering on the street and it went into the hands of private owners and the street is lined with cheap and unsightly frame buildings, many of which have fallen into decay and become nothing less than disreputable. They are occupied as small stores, many of them second-hand and most unattractive, with here and there, at frequent intervals, a liquor saloon, often none too respectable. And now the finishing touch is added by making the center of the Avenue a parking place for automobiles. This is the national thoroughfare which the country reads about.

Are we to leave it in that condition indefinitely? Perish the thought. But what is to be done about it? Do with it just what was intended, undoubtedly, in the beginning. Make it a national thoroughfare by condemning every foot of the land bordering on the Avenue between the Capitol and the Treasury Building for a depth sufficient for the purpose and construct upon it the public buildings so much needed for the housing of the several departments of the Government. There would be plenty of room for them all, I have no doubt, and leave room for parks between them for the length of the street. In this way payments of large rents in the city for Government purposes would be avoided, the efficiency of the service would be greatly increased, and the employees of the Government now working uncomfortably in small, overcrowded, and unsanitary rooms would be properly housed and able to render the best possible service and Pennsylvania Avenue be made the most beautiful, as well as the most imposing, municipal thoroughfare in the world.

This could not, of course, be done out of the current revenues. It should be done by issuing long-time bonds for the improvement of the Capital. It should include an amount sufficient to banish the slums and erect model sanitary houses on the ground they now occupy, and in all other ways put the city in good sanitary condition. This would not only enhance the beauty of the city and remove the plague spots that now breed crime and vice and disease, but in the long run it would be an economy.

At the present time the department buildings are scattered about the city in many places, many of them rented and poorly fitted for the purpose, difficult of access and communication by people doing business with the Government, and inconvenient in the transaction of business by the officers and employees themselves. It has been suggested that the Government acquire the south side of the street for its buildings. If this should be done and the buildings constructed, the street with magnificent and imposing buildings on one side and the one and two story frame shacks ready to collapse with age on the other, it would be an amazing spectacle.

Unfortunately, the Government buildings have not been located together, but have been scattered about the city. This was a great mistake and should be corrected as soon as possible by bringing them together on this one Avenue, thus making the buildings a continuous grouping from the Capitol to the White House. The Book of Estimates for last year showed that we were then paying nearly $600,000 a year for rented buildings. The amount, I understand, will increase this year and continue to grow in amount for the years to come, unless we construct our own buildings. This is exceedingly poor economy and bad business policy.

SIXTEENTH STREET.

Sixteenth is another street that should be made one of the distinctly national streets, and improved and protected accordingly. It is one of the most beautiful and attractive streets and drives in the city. It leads directly out from the front of the White House north to the District line, and is the principal thoroughfare to Rock Creek Park. If Pennsylvania Avenue can not be redeemed, then Sixteenth Street should be made the principal street of the city, and if both can be treated as national thoroughfares to be improved and ornamented as such it would be one commendable step toward making Washington look like a National Capital.

THE CITY HALL.

The poor old City Hall. It seems a pity to say anything about it. It is 91 years old. It gives every evidence of having gone through a long series of inefficient, irresponsible half-and-half legislation. If not, it would have been removed many years ago and replaced by an adequate and modern building in a more suitable place. It has remained so long it might be worth saving as an antique but not at its present location. It is situated on the edge of one of the beautiful parks of the city, where no business building should be allowed to remain. It is dingy with age. I have not seen the inside of it. A view of the outside is quite enough. The plastering on the outside has been off for I do not know how long in spaces of 10 feet square or more, and it looks otherwise dilapidated. It should, for the credit of the city, be destroyed, and a new building of sufficient size, modern in style, and with modern improvements, erected on Pennsylvania Avenue, where all public buildings should be brought together. A suitable building, large enough to accommodate all of the District courts should be constructed and the courts brought together.

It will be a long time before Washington can be made anywhere near a model city while such public buildings are allowed to stand. As it is now, it is a blot on the face of a beautiful park that should be removed.

THE FEEBLE-MINDED AND INEBRIATE.

For a long time efforts have been made by public-spirited citizens of Washington to secure some appropriations that would make suitable and humane provision for the unfortunate feeble-minded, and the victims of the liquor traffic that has been tolerated and legalized by the Government. The feeble-minded who are without means of support should be the especial care of the public authorities. Some home where they can be properly cared for should be provided, as has very properly been done for the aged and infirm. As it is now, some of the charitable institutions are caring for these irresponsible people by finding such places of refuge for them as they can. It is a reproach to the Government that these unfortunates should be so neglected.

As to the confirmed inebriates, they are as helpless and as much to be pitied as the others. They are equally as dependent and irresponsible. A Government that has permitted a traffic that has brought such men to their present deplorable condition should regard it as a sacred duty first to abolish the hateful and destructive traffic and then take proper care of its victims. This has not been done. Like many other imperatively needed reforms in the District, it is not likely to be done under the restrictive limitations of the half-and-half system.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

There is much complaint that the Government is not giving adequate attention and support to the public schools. The buildings are not up to date it is claimed, and there are not enough of them in some localities in the city to accommodate the children who desire to attend the schools. In addition to this there are school buildings having no grounds about them for playgrounds and outdoor recreation. This is a most serious defect that should be corrected without delay. There is under consideration a proposition to establish here a national university at Government expense. That may or may not be within the legitimate scope of governmental activities. But if it is, we had better perfect our common-school system before talking about spending the public funds for universities.

THE PUBLIC MARKETS.

Strong protests have been made against the alleged insanitary condition of the public markets. This was brought to the attention of members of this committee by a resolution of the health committee of the chamber of commerce of the city vigorously condemning the manner in which the markets were being conducted. I received a letter from the Washington Market Co., by E. O. Whitford, in which it is said:

"Many of the statements made in the report of the committee of the chamber of commerce referred to were promptly and completely refuted by John H. Sherman, District of Columbia superintendent of markets. The persons making them have since failed in any effort to substantiate them."

I do not know how "many" of the statements were refuted or how well founded they are, but other like complaints have been made. At all events, it is highly important that the markets should be kept in as nearly perfect sanitary condition as possible. One of the troubles about this and other similar conditions is that under the present systems neither the commissioners nor the health department of the District are provided with sufficient funds to do what they regard as necessary to correct and remove insanitary conditions.

COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURE.

If I am not wholly in error as to what the District of Columbia should and was intended to be, commerce, except so far as it is necessary to meet the wants of the people within the District, and all manufactories should be excluded from it. It should not be a place for making money by commerce, trade, or manufacture. It should be strictly limited to the purposes proper for the National Capital. Some day the whole of the District will be needed for the use of the Government. Much more of it is needed now than is being used for governmental purposes.

It may be difficult for Congress to lawfully control the use of private property for the purposes I have mentioned, but everything possible should be done to confine the District to such uses and purposes as are consistent with its character as a National Capital. Congress should feel this to be one of its responsibilities.

ATTACHED HOUSES.

It is unfortunate that the Government did not retain in itself the title to all the land within the District and lease it instead of vesting the title in private owners. This course would have enabled it to control the kind and quality of the buildings that might be constructed. As it is, many objectionable, unsightly, and insanitary buildings have been erected that will prevent Washington from becoming a model city in fact or in outward appearance for many years. One class of dwelling houses in particular should never have been allowed. The so-called attached houses, rows and rows of which are found in the city—and many others are being erected—belong to the class of objectionable buildings. They are poorly lighted and poorly ventilated as a rule and give the owners or tenants no outdoor space. Besides, from an esthetic point of view, they are unsightly and an offense to the eye. They are built mainly by speculators in real estate and sold for exorbitant prices. The excuse for building such houses is that land is so high that people of moderate means can not afford to buy or rent a detached house. This is a lamentable truth. There is no excuse, however, for the high price of lots in Washington. It is purely speculative and without any just basis or foundation. Speculators make the unreasonable prices and then construct a cheap, unsightly, and insanitary house, because they have pushed up land prices, not values, so unreasonably high that people can not afford anything better.

If it is ever expected to make Washington a model city, this kind of house building will have to be stopped.

CHARITABLE AND PENAL INSTITUTIONS.

I have been pointing out some of the vital conditions existing in the District that are crying loudly for betterment in the interest of public morals and public health. It gives me pleasure now to call attention to some of the good things that have been accomplished along this same line. The Occoquan Workhouse is one of these. It is now a penal institution largely devoted to the punishment and reformation of petty offenders. It is to include, when completed, a strictly reformatory branch, and a prison for those committed for graver and more serious crimes. But this last branch is to be made, just as far as possible, a reformatory institution rather than a means of punishment. It is under the direct supervision of the Board of Charities, a praiseworthy institution composed of citizens of Washington of the highest character, who generously and patriotically give of their time for the public good. I have visited the place and gone over the different branches of the work and tried to inform myself as to the success of the undertaking. It has struck me as an admirable effort to reform the morals and habits of the inmates and start them on the road to better things and a life of usefulness. It is a farm of something like 2,500 acres that was taken in its wild state, mostly a forest, and is being cleared and put into cultivation. It has its dairy, a hog ranch, as we would call it in the West, a large poultry farm, and a brick-manufacturing plant that is furnishing much of the brick used by the Government in public buildings.

As the farm is cleared, a work that is being carried forward, the land is being put under cultivation, part of it in orchard. The buildings in which the prisoners are fed and quartered are well lighted and ventilated, the inmates are well clothed and well fed, and everything is kept in excellent sanitary condition. The lumber was taken from the trees and the buildings constructed almost entirely by the work of the prisoners. There are no cells, except a half dozen or so used for necessary discipline and which are rarely used, and no walls about the grounds. Very few efforts to escape occur. There is a well-equipped hospital, for which there is a gratifying lack of use, because the general health of the inmates is unusually good. This results, no doubt, largely from the fact that they are so well housed and well fed and kept constantly at work during working hours at outdoor labor.

On the whole, this institution impressed me as an admirable one, and I am informed that it has attracted very wide and favorable attention and is being taken as a model for like penal institutions. So for once the work of the Government in the District is taken as a model. It should broaden its beneficent work until the whole city of Washington may justly be looked upon the world over as a model city.

But the results of this reform movement are greatly hindered and retarded by the existence of the slum conditions in the city, to which I have referred. Many, if not most, of the prisoners at Occoquan come out of these slums or are the product of these evil places. They are usually committed for short terms. On being released they almost certainly return to the old conditions and the old environments that made them prisoners and outcasts, sometimes because they know of nowhere else to go. As a natural result they are criminals still, and bound to be returned to Occoquan or some other prison, sooner or later, which affords another convincing argument in favor of the complete demolition of the slums.

The Institution for the Aged and Infirm is another beneficence greatly to be commended. The buildings are admirably arranged for the comfort of the old people who are there. Every effort is made by the management to make them comfortable and contented. I speak from a personal inspection as well as from information obtained from others, and am glad to be able to commend this benevolent institution to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Another of the worthy efforts to make more bearable the lot of the dependent portion of the community is the Industrial School for Dependent Colored Boys. It is located on the same farm with the aged and infirm, but is separated from that institution and is under an entirely separate and independent management. The boys are not criminals. It is not a penal institution, but entirely educational in its character. It is doing an excellent and much-needed work, and should be generously supported and its scope extended. It will keep many a boy out of the slum life and make of him a useful citizen.

The several penal, benevolent, and charitable institutions I have mentioned are an object lesson that should not be overlooked or disregarded. They show what inestimable good the Government can do for humanity and for the betterment of conditions in the District by the judicious use of the public funds for the public good. It should be an incentive to more extensive efforts to purify and elevate conditions in the District and protect and preserve the public health.

TAXATION.

The question of taxation and the share of the burden of the expenses of the District that should, in equity, be borne, respectively, by the National Government and the private owners of property in the District is the ultimate question to be considered and reported upon. The several matters which I have attempted to bring to the attention of Congress are only incidental to this main question.

They are incidents, however, which, in my judgment, should receive careful consideration in an endeavor to determine who should bear the burden, and, if it is to be divided, the proportion to be borne by each. I do not believe the burden should be divided. I think it should be borne by the Government for reasons that I have already stated and for others that might be mentioned. The whole burden of maintaining its Capital should be borne by the Government. But in consideration of this the residents and property owners should contribute, in taxes, a fair and reasonable amount to the Government for the protection and other benefits they receive from the maintenance of the city at the expense of the Government. It was conceded at the hearing by some of the advocates of the half-and-half system that this would be the ideal system and, as a matter of principle, it would be just and right. There were two things that the people of the District feared if this plan should be adopted: First, that the Government, through its Congress, would not adequately support its own Capital by the needed appropriations; and, second, that the people of the District would be overtaxed.

This view of it was very ably presented by the Committee of One Hundred, claiming to represent most of the people of the District, and by others. There is no reason to doubt the sincerity of their views or of their expression of their fears of what would result if the half-and-half system should be abolished. I think it is fair to say that the only foundation for the advocacy of the continuance of the half-and-half system was these fears. To concede that the fears themselves are well-founded is to seriously reflect upon Congress. There is no doubt, in my mind, that in some respects, and particularly respecting the matters that I have already pointed out, Congress has failed in its duty to the District and to the Nation. But this failure has occurred under the half-and-half system. I should be sorry to believe that it would be worse if that system were abolished.

I do not believe that Congress has purposely or willfully neglected the interests of the District. I think there are very few Members of either House of Congress who have made themselves familiar with the conditions in the District or appreciate its needs as they should.

I am making this extended report largely with the hope that it will help to inform Congress of some of the evils that exist here and bring about a more serious and broader view of the situation. I have been entirely convinced by the evidence taken at the hearing that the people of the District are not undertaxed. They are, in my judgment, bearing their full share of the burden of the expenses of the District. Just now, when times are hard and real estate values are depressed, I think they are being taxed too high because the assessment of real estate is too high. It is to be hoped that times will improve and set this condition right. But, aside from this, I am satisfied that real estate is appraised far beyond its real value because land values in the District are enormously inflated by speculation. This, however, can not be charged up against the Government. It is the result of inordinate greed on the part of some people, for which innocent property owners, especially the small-home owners, are suffering the penalty. The single-tax theory was very thoroughly and ably presented at the hearing. It has much to commend it. Indeed, I think it would be a good system to adopt in the District. It would simplify conditions very much and on the whole, if rightly and fairly adjusted, would be more just and equitable than the system that now prevails. It is questionable, however, whether it would be wise to attempt to adopt it in connection with the settlement of the present controversy. It will probably be adopted later on. The two civil Commissioners of the District and Justice Siddons, former commissioner, indorsed it, and other gentlemen of standing and ability gave it their earnest support. It is a question that I think should receive careful consideration at the appropriate time.

As to the half-and-half system opinion in the District as expressed at the hearing is divided. The committee was not favored with any expression of views by people outside of the District, although the whole country is directly interested in the question. There was no defense of the half-and-half system on principle. The defense of it, as I have said and as the hearings will show, was founded wholly on the fear that if it were abolished Congress would not do its duty toward the District. This is a very poor and illogical foundation for a fiscal system or form of government.

That the Government should assume the attitude of a mere contributor to the support of its Capital is not only illogical and absurd in itself but is a violation of the Constitution, which gives Congress exclusive jurisdiction over it, and thereby makes it exclusively responsible for it.

SUFFRAGE AND REPRESENTATION.

The question of suffrage is not strictly within the objects for which the committee was appointed and very properly is not covered by the general report. However, it was very fully discussed at the hearing, and may very well be considered briefly in connection with what I am saying on the general condition of the District and my reasons for thinking that it should be treated wholly as a national affair. Besides, the people of the District, or some of them, insist very earnestly that without representation they should not be taxed at all.

My views on the subject may be stated in a very few words. Local self-government within the Capital, which by the Constitution is under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, is out of the question. Being the National Capital, and the Government having such vast interests here, which will of necessity increase from year to year, Congress alone must manage its affairs. That is one of my reasons for thinking that the municipality of the District of Columbia should be abolished. But this is no reason why the franchise should not be allowed the people of the District for other purposes. It is unjust and un-American to deny the franchise to any citizen having the requisite qualifications of a voter. There is no reason that occurs to me for denying the people of the District the right to vote for presidential electors, for example. They could be given this right only by an amendment to the Constitution, but I think such an amendment might very justly and very properly be made. I submit, too, that as the District is governed by Congress the people should have some representation or representatives in that body.

There is another phase of the situation that deserves mention. There are a number of officers appointed by the President and the Commissioners of the District whose duties are confined to local affairs. It has been the custom to select for these offices men from the States. This, in my judgment, should not be allowed. No man from California or Massachusetts or North Carolina or any other State should be appointed to an office the duties of which are confined to the District of Columbia and its affairs. Such officers should be appointed from the District.

CONCLUSION.

In dealing with the problems of the District in this report I have been generously aided by the District Commissioners, Dr. William C. Woodward, health officer, officers of the Board of Charities, and other officers of the District, all of whom are genuinely desirous of bettering the social and health conditions of the District. Dr. Woodward has, in a very interesting review of sanitary conditions furnished me at my request, called attention to other matters needing attention, including the reclamation of the Anacostia Flats, which has already been entered upon; abolition of alley houses; public baths, public-comfort stations, and others. Space will not permit me to discuss all of those, but I may desire to call attention to them later.

His report indicates that conditions have improved, the death rate being decreased per thousand from 1885 to 1914 from—colored, 33.63 to 24.31; and white, 27.75 to 16.59. This is a gratifying improvement, but there is still room for greater improvement in conditions as they exist now. Of the Washington Asylum Hospital, of which I have already spoken, he says:

"The condition of the Washington Asylum Hospital and the Municipal Lodging House is, however, notorious, and these buildings should be abandoned for hospital and housing purposes."

It may seem that I have gone far astray in my treatment of the subject submitted to the committee. I have ventured to submit these various side issues for two reasons: First, because I think they should influence Congress to take the affairs of the District more directly under its control and appropriate more liberally for its needs, regardless of the half-and-half system or any liability of the District or its taxpayers; and, second, because I felt very strongly that Members of Congress should know more about the unfortunate conditions that Congress can relieve if it will than I knew before this investigation commenced and more than I think most of the Members know now. I hope what I have disclosed will help, at least, to make the conditions better understood and arouse such interest as will bring about such legislation as will cure the evils.

I have said some unpleasant things about the conditions that prevail here in Washington. I have said them with malice toward none. They are things that needed to be said, and this seemed to me to be a proper time and occasion to say them. Some of them are things that should ring out from every pulpit in the land. They should be shouted from the housetops until the conditions are corrected. All of them should challenge the attention of the civic organizations and of all good people in the District who believe in making this city pure, clean, and healthful and decent as well as beautiful. But above everything and everybody else, it should call upon Congress to take prompt and adequate steps to remove from the Capital and the Nation the stain of permitting such conditions to exist.

JOHN D. WORKS.

JANUARY 6, 1916.

Mr. WORKS. Out of order I desire to introduce two short bills proposing to carry out some of the suggestions which my statement contains. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3249) to abolish the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by good and sufficient deed of conveyance, to the Government of the United States all property of the District of Columbia, of every kind and nature, real, personal, and mixed; and the United States Government, in consideration of such conveyance, shall, and does hereby, assume and will pay all the debts of every kind and nature of the said District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the municipality of the District of Columbia shall, upon such conveyance of its property, be, and it is hereby, dissolved and abolished, and its powers, duties, and obligations transferred to and vested in the United States, and the said District shall become and the territory now constituting the District of Columbia shall hereafter be known and designated as the City of Washington, and said City of Washington is hereby declared to be the Capital of the United States and under the direct ownership, control, and supervision of the Government, without the intervention of any municipal corporation or body.

SEC. 3. That until otherwise provided by act of Congress the officers of the District of Columbia shall be and continue as the officers of the National Government and shall perform for the Government the same duties now performed for the District of Columbia and be subject to all laws and rules and regulations now in force as to their appointment, terms of office, and removal until otherwise provided by law: Provided, That such Commissioners shall hereafter be known and designated as the Commissioners of the City of Washington, and all other officers of said District shall be known, respectively, and designated as officers of said City of Washington.

SEC. 4. That all privately owned property in the District of Columbia, hereafter to be designated as the City of Washington, shall be subject to reasonable and just taxes, to be used to pay the expenses of said City of Washington: Provided, That the rate of taxation and the basis of assessment of property shall remain as now provided by law, and all other provisions for raising revenues for said District shall remain in force and be applied to the payment of the expenses of the City of Washington as herein provided.

SEC. 5. That all moneys derived from such taxation assessments or other means provided by law shall be paid into the United States Treasury, to be applied to the expenses of said City of Washington, but the expenses of the City of Washington shall be paid by the Government out of its Treasury by appropriations made by Congress, without regard to the amount collected from privately owned property, and the property owners within the District shall not be responsible therefor, except for the payment of their taxes, the purpose and intention being to constitute the District of Columbia, hereafter to be known as the City of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, and to make the Government wholly and alone responsible for its government, maintenance, upbuilding, and beautification, and to deprive the municipal government of all control over the same and to relieve the property owners and residents of the District of all such responsibility or control except for the payment of such taxes as may be lawfully assessed against them or their property.

SEC. 6. That until otherwise provided by act of Congress, taxes shall be levied, assessed, and collected as now provided by law, except that the same shall not be based upon the estimated expenses of the District, or the one-half thereof, but upon a reasonable and just estimate of the obligations of property owners and residents of the District as compensation for the benefits and advantages resulting to them from the maintenance and support of the Capital by the Government in which they live or own property, according to the rate of taxation and basis of assessment above provided for.

SEC. 7. That all causes of action that might, under the laws as they now exist, be prosecuted against the District of Columbia, whether arising before or after the passage of this act, may hereafter be prosecuted by appropriate action in the courts against the United States the same as they may under existing law be prosecuted against such District.

The bill (S. 3250) to improve the sanitary condition of the city of Washington, D. C., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That square 28 of the city of Washington, D. C., because of its insanitary condition, the character and quality of its buildings, and their dilapidated and insanitary condition, is hereby declared to be dangerous to the public health, detrimental to public morals and the public safety, and a public nuisance.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to acquire for the Government of the United States by purchase or condemnation the title to said square for the purpose of razing the buildings situate thereon and constructing and maintaining thereon, as hereinafter provided, sanitary dwelling houses for the use of tenants.

SEC. 3. That upon acquiring title to said property the said commissioners shall cause the buildings thereon to be removed, the said square replatted, with ample streets and passageways and means of ingress and egress, and construct thereon model sanitary houses of moderate size to be rented by the Government to the poor and the laboring classes at reasonable and moderate rentals.

SEC. 4. That the Government shall hold and retain title to said square for the purposes above mentioned and the improvement of the sanitary condition of the said city of Washington, and the said commissioners shall provide such supervision, control, and inspection of said property as to make and continuously maintain it in a sanitary and healthful condition, free, as far as possible, from immorality and crime.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby appropriated of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $600,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

PRODUCTION OF BINDING TWINE.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit a concurrent resolution, and I desire to present a little article from the press on the subject. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5) was read, as follows:

Whereas binding twine is one of the large items of expense in the production of grain; and

Whereas it has been alleged in the public press and by individuals that the present price thereof is exorbitant and is fixed and controlled by certain persons and corporations: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to investigate and report to Congress what companies and corporations are engaged in the importation of sisal and manila hemp and the production of binding twine, and to what extent, if any, they control the price thereof, and whether there are any combinations or agreements to fix and control the wholesale or retail prices of sisal and manila binding twine in the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may read the following editorial, which is in the form of a letter of A. O. Sather, of Starkweather, N. Dak., published in the Starkweather Tribune of December 30, 1915, which explains the necessity and propriety of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A PROTEST—PROMINENT LOCAL IMPLEMENT DEALER URGES FARMERS TO WAGE WAR ON SISAL TRUST.

Permit me to ask space in your valuable paper to call attention to something I believe to be of considerable importance. I have it on good authority that a corporation composed of American bankers has been formed for the purpose of controlling the price of sisal imported into this country for the manufacture of binding twine and rope. The bankers interested control the National City and Chase National Banks, of New York City; the Commercial International Bank, of Chicago; the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., the Whitney National Bank, and the Interstate Trust Co., all of New Orleans. The permanent officers and directors will be elected in a few days. Among them will be Messrs. Waxler and Dinkins, of New Orleans; Breckenridge and Jones, of St. Louis; and one or two other bankers of New York and Chicago. Levi Meyer has been engaged as corporation counsel.

Now, I have been engaged in the implement business 18 years, and am somewhat familiar with trust prices. Before the Spanish-American War I sold sisal twine for 6 cents a pound and made a fair profit. Some of our American bankers then formed a trust in Yucatan, Mexico, where the sisal fiber is grown. They have controlled the price and output ever since, and immediately the price jumped to 10 cents a pound, and has remained about that ever since. The new corporation has served notice that twine prices will be advanced 2 cents a pound over last year, and we are absolutely at their mercy. I was thinking it was my duty to so inform the public. I believe the farmers' clubs should correspond with our representatives in Washington and see what they can do. I am sure the implement dealers at their various State conventions will take some action, but I believe a protest direct from the farmers, who are the only ones robbed, would be more effective.

Yours, respectfully,

A. O. SATHER.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the letter just read may accompany the resolution to the proper committee. I do not know what has been the usual practice with reference to this character of resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the Committee on Manufactures, the Chair would suggest.

Mr. STONE. There was much confusion while the Secretary was reading. May I ask the Senator a question? The article just read refers to sisal grass or to sisal?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; the binding twine made from it.

Mr. STONE. Has the Senator a resolution pending to investigate the question?

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; I offer a concurrent resolution instructing the Attorney General to investigate the matter. A trust is charged with violating the law; the names are given of those who compose the trust or combination; and therefore it is an easy matter for the Department of Justice to make the investigation. I have deemed it a subject proper for the joint action of Congress rather than a mere matter of information to be obtained from the Attorney General's office.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that I had a letter upon the same subject yesterday and brought it to the attention of the Trade Commission. I think perhaps that commission may have jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. STONE. I was going to remark that I have had communications of like kind, and I was wondering just what would be the best plan of proceeding. Possibly that adopted by the Senator from North Dakota is about the best thing available for us to do. We all know, at least many of us know, that there was a great shortage of sisal some time ago, due to disturbed conditions in Mexico, and efforts were made to get ships to bring it out. As I recall, some provision of that kind was made for transporting it across the water. There was great difficulty in getting it from the interior of Yucatan. Until very recently I had not heard of the combination referred to in the communication read a moment ago.

If there is a combination of that kind to absorb the output from Yucatan and practically filch from the manufacturers or farmers of this country——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we can not hear a word on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. STONE. I would be very glad, indeed, if some means might be adopted to take drastic action as speedily as possible.

I do not know, Mr. President, just how long it would take the State Department to get hold of this information, to gather the facts, and to institute suit in the courts; things of that kind run along quite a while. I had, however, hoped that some Senator possibly had in mind some way of getting directly and more speedily the facts.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that the letter which has been read into the RECORD gives the full names of all the banks, corporations, and others who are interested in the combination, as well as the names of their attorneys. Therefore it presents to the department the principal information along which it can make very speedy investigation. What we wish first to obtain is the information itself as to whether there is a combination. I know of no reason now why sisal can not be easily obtained from Yucatan, or wherever it may be raised; but there is no question that notice has been served that there will be an immediate rise in the price of binding twine and of sisal. No reason is given for that, but there is suggested here a new combination extending its scope and powers over the production and importation of sisal and the manufacture of twine. I believe there will be little difficulty on the part of the department in speedily ascertaining what the facts are, reporting them to Congress; and if, in the course of the investigation, the Department of Justice finds there is such a combination against the interstate-commerce law and against the law pertaining to trusts, it will of its own volition act on that without any direction from the Congress.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word with reference to the question which has been discussed by my colleague [Mr. McCUMBER]. Those of us who are familiar with the conditions of agriculture and know something about binding twine are also familiar with the fact that it is not only the price of sisal that has advanced but that it is the price of the twine after it has been manufactured; and, had it not been for the fact that twine is being manufactured in some of the States, for instance in the State of Minnesota and to some extent in the State of North Dakota——

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is also manufactured in the State of Michigan.

Mr. GRONNA. And in Michigan also—the price of twine would be a great deal higher than it now is. We know, however, that there has been a combination in existence, not for a few years, but for very many years, and that this combination has been able to unduly advance the price of this article, which is absolutely indispensable to the farmer.

Mr. President, I receive a great many communications with regard to this matter, and I believe that the course taken by my colleague is a feasible one. I think, however, that his resolution should go to the Committee on Agriculture, because that committee, I think, is as much interested in the affairs pertaining to the farm as is any other committee. So I simply suggest that the matter be referred to that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if this resolution simply asks for information or does it ask for an investigation?

Mr. McCUMBER. It asks for an investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. By a committee of Congress?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; an investigation by the Department of Justice of the charges set forth in the information and editorial which has been read.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply rose to suggest to the Senator that the easiest way to get at it would be to put it in the form of a Senate resolution. Then it would not have to be acted upon by the other House. The same investigation could be made under a Senate resolution direct as under a concurrent resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I differ with the Senator on that point, Mr. President. If it were the intention of the resolution to elicit information only, I think the suggestion would be very proper, and I would have taken that course; but as the purpose of the resolution is to instruct the Department of Justice to make an investigation of the subject, it seems to me that the resolution should be acted upon by both Houses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator desire the resolution referred?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 49) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the resolution should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that the resolution is in the stereotyped form of all such resolutions.

Mr. SMOOT. Will there be any expense attached to it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I presume there will be expense if hearings are held.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it will be so referred.

ARMY POSTS.

Mr. KENYON. I submit a resolution requesting certain information from the Secretary of War, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 48) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War furnish to the Senate, if not incompatible with public interest, the following: A statement showing—

First. A list of all Army posts in the United States and their locations.

Second. The amounts that have been expended in the establishment and construction of each of said Army posts.

Third. The amount expended yearly for the last 10 years in maintaining each of said Army posts, and if any of them have not been maintained for said years the amount expended during the years they have been maintained.

Fourth. The use now being made of each of said Army posts and the use that has been made during each year of their existence for the last 10 years.

Fifth. Whether or not all of said Army posts are of military necessity in properly carrying on the work of the War Department.

Sixth. Whether or not some of said Army posts, in the interest of economy and without diminishing efficiency, could be abolished or consolidated; and if so, which ones.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Pursuant to the notice I gave on yesterday, I submit the following resolution:

The resolution (S. Res. 50) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXV, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, be amended as follows:

Insert after the paragraph which reads, "A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to consist of five Senators," a new paragraph to read as follows:

"A Committee on Roads, to consist of 17 Senators, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation relating to the construction and maintenance of roads."

THE PUBLIC REVENUE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Thursday, the 13th instant, I shall address the Senate on so much of the President's annual message as relates to the public revenue.

CONDITION OF JEWS IN COUNTRIES AT WAR.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent to take from the table Senate resolution 45, submitted by me on yesterday, but which, on the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] was laid over until to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 45) was read, as follows:

Whereas in the various countries now engaged in war there are 9,000,000 Jews, the great majority of whom are destitute of food, shelter, and clothing; and

Whereas millions of them have been driven from their homes without warning, deprived of an opportunity to make provision for their most elementary wants, causing starvation, disease, and untold suffering; and

Whereas the people of the United States of America have learned with sorrow of this terrible plight of millions of human beings and have most generously responded to the cry for help whenever such an appeal has reached them: Therefore be it

Resolved, That, in view of the misery, wretchedness, and hardships which these 9,000,000 Jews are suffering, the President of the United States be respectfully asked to designate a day on which the citizens of this country may give expression to their sympathy by contributing to the funds now being raised for the relief of the Jews in the war zones.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I most respectfully ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, on yesterday when the Senator from New Jersey offered the resolution and had it read I was engaged in conversation with some Senators near by, so that I only heard a part of it and hence asked him to let it go over until this morning, which he kindly consented to do. Before the holiday adjournment the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] offered a resolution very similar applying to the Polish people who have suffered as a result of the war, and it was unanimously agreed to. I see no reason whatever why this resolution of like kind should not be agreed to. The reasons that induced the Senate to act favorably on the resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana certainly apply in the present instance; and, as I have said, I see no objection, Mr. President, to the adoption of this resolution, as I saw no objection to the adoption of the one offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The Poles and the Jews of Europe have no distinctive government of their own. Their position is anomalous. I would question very much the propriety, whatever the sympathy of Senators might be, of having the Congress, or either branch of it, take action of this general character with respect to any of the organized nations engaged in war. We have heard more or less sympathetic expressions on the floor of the Senate in the past respecting Belgium, and possibly Serbia; but I think Belgium and Serbia, being organized nations, hold a different attitude with respect to our Government from that of the Poles or the Jews.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been listening with interest to the Senator. Does not the Senator think that our sympathies and our contributions, if need be, should go out to the Armenians quite as much as to these other people who have not organized governments? I say that not out of hostility to this resolution at all.

Mr. STONE. Yes, I understand; and, of course, I think it would be a beautiful tribute and expression of American generosity and kindliness to have our sympathy and our contributions go out to the people of Armenia or to any other people who need them.

Mr. President, I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution which I offered on yesterday. I think it is Senate resolution 42.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. FALL. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 42), submitted by Mr. FALL on the 5th instant, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the Senate upon the following subjects and to transmit to the Senate the documents, letters, reports, orders, etc., hereinafter referred to.

First. Is there a government now existing in the Republic of Mexico; and, if so,

Second. Is such government recognized by this Government; how is such government maintained and where; who is now the recognized head of such government and is the same a constitutional government?

Third. By what means was the recognition of any government in Mexico brought about and what proceedings, if any, were followed prior to and resulting in recognition, in any conference between this country and Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Guatemala, and any other country or countries?

Fourth. What assurances has the government of Mexico given this Government as to its course in protecting American lives and property in Mexico and in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California; and, if such assurances have been given, what evidence has this Government of the ability of such government to fulfill its promises and obligations in the premises?

Fifth. What orders or instructions have been issued to our officials and armed forces on or near the Mexican border for the protection of the lives, property, and peace of American citizens along said border?

Sixth. What assurances have been received from the Mexican government, or requested by this Government, as to payment of American damage claims for injury to life or property of our citizens resulting from the acts of Mexico, or citizens of that country, within the past five years?

Seventh. What assurances have been given by the Mexican government as to the protection of foreigners and citizens, and particularly in the free exercise of their religion in public or in private?

Eighth. Reports of the Brazilian minister to Mexico, made to this Government by letter or otherwise, while said minister was representing this Government in Mexico; also reports of American consuls and consular representatives in Mexico during the past four years, together with reports from any special or other sources of information available or in hand, concerning or relating to Mexican affairs and conditions or to Mexican officials or military and factional leaders, reports of the actions of the Red Cross in Mexico, and their reports to this Government.

Ninth. Data, letters, and reports relating to the closing of the port of El Paso and reopening same to importations of meat from Juarez, and also to the setting aside or revocation of any decrees or orders of Villa concerning mining property.

Tenth. Information concerning the occupation of Vera Cruz by our land and naval forces, duration of such occupation, our administration of affairs during such occupancy, and the date and cause of the evacuation of Vera Cruz, with all correspondence concerning such evacuation.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the purpose of this resolution, of course, is made clear by its contents as read. The last official word which we had from the President of the United States as to Mexico, or as to conditions in Mexico, as to the existence of a government or the nonexistence of a government in Mexico, was in his message to the Congress of the United States of April 20, 1914, wherein he asked the Congress to ratify his act in sending the land and naval forces of the United States to occupy Vera Cruz and to secure from the then de facto Government of Mexico reparation for insults offered the flag of the United States.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FALL. For the purpose of a question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator's speech, since he is making an address on the subject; but I desire to know, as a matter of information, whether or not the calendar has been disposed of.

Mr. FALL. That information is for the Chair and not for the Senator from New Mexico to extend.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was awaiting, of course, to be informed by the Chair. Has the morning business been closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it has not been.

Mr. LODGE. Morning business has not been closed. This is morning business, coming over from a previous day.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I understand the rule in this matter, then, the remarks at this hour on morning business are limited to five minutes to each Senator. Of course I do not have any idea of raising that question. That was not my object in addressing the Chair. I simply want to insist that the calendar be taken up in its proper order and manner from now on.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator is making a point of order, of course I will yield for that purpose. I yielded for a question. If the Senator has a point of order to make, of course he has a perfect right to make it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will not raise the point of order this morning.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, in the message sent or delivered to this Congress on April 20, 1914, the President of the United States said that "if we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, Mexico has no government." We had heard from the President of the United States prior to April 20, 1914. In his message of December 2, 1913, the President informed the Congress that "Mexico has no government." He further informed the Congress at that time that "we are the friends of constitutional government in America." We had heard from the President prior even to December 2, 1913, when in a message he said to the Congress of the United States that he had sent a personal representative to Mexico to demand of the de facto government of Mexico certain things.

Among the demands which he stated to us he had made upon the de facto government of Mexico, as he claimed it to be—the constitutional government of Mexico, as Mexico claimed it to be, and as it was recognized to be by the majority of the great nations of the world—the President said to the Congress that he demanded, in the absence of any "universally acknowledged political authority there," that security be given "for an early and free election in which all would agree to take part" and "all parties to abide by the result."

In 1913 the President of the United States demanded that prior to recognition of any government in Mexico there should be a fair and free election in which all citizens should take part and all should agree to abide by the result. On the opening of this Congress, as is customary, the President of the United States delivered a message to the Congress. Remember that we had heard nothing from him since April 20, 1914, with reference to Mexico until on December 7 he addressed the Congress. His only reference to Mexico in his message was in the words which I shall read. These words followed an expression of opinion from the President of the United States as to our course with reference to Latin America generally; and he says:

> We have been put to the test in the case of Mexico and we have stood the test. Whether we have benefited Mexico by the course we have pursued remains to be seen.

In view of the doubt expressed by the President of the United States as to whether some course which has been pursued by this Government, without Congress being informed as to what that course was, will inure to the benefit of Mexico, certainly the Congress of the United States is entitled to know officially what has been done by this Government with reference to Mexico since April 20, 1914. Therefore I propose that we should request of the President information, first, as to whether there is a government in Mexico; second, whether he has recognized that government.

We are to presume that some government has been recognized by the President of the United States as existing in Mexico, because we now have pending before the Senate of the United States—the coordinate branch of the United States Government which must be consulted and join with the President in these constitutional matters—the nomination of an ambassador to Mexico. We are asked to confirm the nomination of an ambassador to a country which, judging from the last word uttered by the administrative department of this Government, has no government—de facto, de jure, constitutional, or otherwise.

If, since the last message of the President upon this subject, circumstances have arisen which have justified him in the recognition of some government in Mexico, Congress should have been informed before or at the time the nomination of the ambassador was sent in, provided the course heretofore universally pursued by Presidents of the United States, from the time of Washington down to that of Woodrow Wilson, had been followed; provided we are not to do in this matter as we have done in various others—break precedents, rather than follow them.

Mr. President, I would be the last Senator to question the undoubted right of the President of the United States to recognize a foreign government. This recognition can be effected in many ways—by the appointment of an ambassador, for example, or by accepting an ambassador, granting exequaturs to ambassadors or diplomatic officers sent here by such government as requests recognition. No one questions this right in the President of the United States. But in no instance, in so far as I have read the diplomatic history of this country, has any President ever, under any circumstances, recognized a new government or a change in an old government without imparting to the Congress of the United States his reasons for such recognition, together with the fact that he has so recognized such government. Numerous instances can be cited to sustain this proposition, if necessary, and to the general proposition I know of no exception.

This being the case, Mr. President, and particularly in view of the doubt expressed by the President as to whether some action which he has taken with reference to Mexico will be of any avail to that country, it is certainly the duty of the Congress of the United States, which is called upon now under the Constitution to act jointly with him with reference to Mexican affairs, to request most respectfully of him information as to such affairs and the basis upon which he has acted, if he has acted, and the basis upon which he has sent to the Senate of the United States the name of an ambassador to Mexico, when the last word we had heard from him was that there was no government and that he refused to recognize a government except under certain circumstances.

I for one would like to know, and I think the Senate and the Congress and the people of the United States would like to know, whether there is a government in Mexico, whether it has been recognized by the Government of the United States; and they would like to know, Mr. President, whether the President of the United States has been able to enforce his ideas as he has expressed them, not only to the Congress but also to the people of the United States, in his Indianapolis speech, for example, with reference to Mexico, and the various speeches he has made upon various occasions to various bodies upon what should be done in Mexico. I should like to know, for example, if the magnificent sentiments which he uttered to Mr. Blythe and which were reported by Mr. Blythe in an interview in the Saturday Evening Post have been carried out by the President in action. I should like to know, Mr. President, what the action of the Government of the United States has been, and compare it with the fair words and the manly phrases of the President of the United States.

Now, as to this inquiry and as to whether it is proper. Mr. President, some very high authorities have spoken with reference to the duty of Congress in matters of this kind. I am going to read, Mr. President, from one:

> It is the proper duty of a representative body to look diligently into every affair of government and to talk much about what it sees. It is meant to be the eyes and the voice and to embody the wisdom and will of its constituents. Unless Congress have and use every means of acquainting itself with the acts and the disposition of the administrative agents of the Government, the country must be helpless to learn how it is being served; and unless Congress both scrutinize these things and sift them by every form of discussion, the country must remain in embarrassing, crippling ignorance of the very affairs which it is most important that it should understand and direct. The informing function of Congress should be preferred even to its legislative function. The argument is not only that discussed and interrogated administration is the only pure and efficient administration, but, more than that, that the only really self-governing people is that people which discusses and interrogates its administration. * * * It would be hard to conceive of there being too much talk about the practical concerns and processes of government. Such talk it is which, when earnestly and purposefully conducted, clears the public mind and shapes the demands of public opinion. (Congressional Government, 1885, pp. 303–304.)

And again, Mr. President, the same authority speaking of the difficulty encountered by the Congress of the United States in obtaining information from the administrative officers, says:

> [From State and Federal Governments of the United States, by Woodrow Wilson, 1889. (Par. 232, "The Senate and the Executive," pp. 101–102.)]
> But it is not always easy to get legislative questions fully and correctly answered, for the officers of the Government are in no way responsible to either House for their official conduct; they belong to an entirely separate and independent branch of the Government; only such high crimes and misdemeanors as lay them open to impeachment expose them to the power of the Houses. The committeees are, therefore, frequently prevented from doing their work of inquiry well, and the Senate has to act in the dark.

The last quotation, Mr. President, that I may not be misunderstood as I have been before in making quotations in the Senate from possibly not so high authorities, I will state is from the discussion of the Senate and the Executive as contained in the "State and Federal Governments of the United States," by Woodrow Wilson. The first quotation is from "Congressional Government," by Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Along in the same connection, if I remember the authority correctly, did the Senator find that the author opposed cloture in the Senate and said that the Senate was a council of revision which furnished the most valuable part of congressional Government?

Mr. FALL. I think so. I have found various expressions from the same high authority as to the necessity for "pitiless publicity" bearing upon the deliberations of the Congress of the United States, and various expressions as to secret caucus legislation and secret committee legislation, and as to the deliberations of Congress and the entire Government of the people being controlled by a few strong men heading committees, and have found insistence upon publicity, insistence upon discussion, as repeatedly the same author has insisted upon discussion and full deliberation in legislative halls.

Now, Mr. President, in view of the authority which I have quoted, I think we are entitled to ask an answer and as early an answer as convenient from the administrative department upon the propositions touched upon in this resolution.

In examining other authorities upon this subject, scrutinizing the acts of other Presidents of the United States, it will be found that even where the President of the United States, as in Mexico in 1848 and 1849, had no minister representing this Government and where the President appointed a special representative to examine into affairs that he might act intelligently as the President of the United States—as we are informed, through the press, that President Wilson has repeatedly done with reference to Mexico—the President of the United States upon the first meeting of Congress has seen fit invariably, as was done by Mr. Buchanan in the instance cited, to convey the information to the Senate as to what he had done and to say to them in sending in Mr. McLane's nomination as the ambassador to Mexico that he had instructed Mr. McLane to recognize the Juarez government, because, upon examination, he had discovered that Juarez was the constitutional President of Mexico.

Without an exception, in so far as I have been able to discover, Mr. President, every President of the United States heretofore has invariably fully informed Congress, of his own motion, as to these matters. I recall one instance in which President Jackson, who has been spoken of rather favorably by the eminent author from whom I have quoted, sent a message to the Congress of the United States, in which he said he would not raise the question as to whether it was his constitutional prerogative or whether he should act jointly with the Congress of the United States in the recognition of a foreign government. As late as 1877, with reference to Mexico, almost a similar condition of affairs existed apparently as exists now, when Diaz claimed to be the constitutional President of Mexico.

Upon investigation during the recess of Congress the President of the United States convinced himself that he was the de facto governing power or President of Mexico, and he stated to Congress the reasons for such belief at its first meeting, saying that he would have recognized him as President of Mexico except for the fact that there was a disturbance at Brownsville, Tex., on this side of the river, caused by marauding bands of Mexicans coming from the other side, and that therefore he had so far failed to recognize Mr. Diaz. He did later in 1878 recognize Diaz as the President of Mexico, but it was after the United States Government, under the orders of the Secretary of War, had sent armed troops of the United States across the Mexican border in pursuit of those marauding bands and had recaptured the stolen property and punished the thieves and murderers. It was after a Secretary of State of the United States had notified Mexico that the first duty of a Government was to protect its citizens, that it made no difference to this Government how such protection was brought about, whether enforced by treaty, by judicial decision, by administrative action, or whether it must be forced at the point of the rifle; and in this instance he notified the minister that the protection of Americans on this side of the line and the punishment of those who had assaulted them or attacked them would be meted out to them in Mexico if they should not be caught in this country. Mr. Evarts was Secretary of State, and his communication was to Mr. J. W. Foster, ambassador to Mexico and father-in-law of the present Secretary of State.

Without exception, as I have said, Mr. President, it has been the universal custom to send to the Senate and to the Congress of the United States, certainly in every annual message of the President, full information as to foreign affairs and as to matters of importance involving this Government.

During this administration alone, for the first time in my knowledge, so far as I am able to read history, has any President dared to ignore the coordinate branch of the Government, the Congress of the United States, as it has been ignored in almost every instance by the present occupant of the White House.

Mr. President, I have read some of the words of the President as to what he should demand in Mexico prior to recognition of the government. The matters which I have referred to as having been given utterance to in public speeches I shall not refer to at length. I have confined myself to those words which were uttered to the Congress of the United States. He has uttered other words, Mr. President, also with reference to what he should do in Mexico. When he said that Mr. Huerta had refused his demands, in closing his message to the Congress of the United States, he said:

> We should let everyone who assumes to exercise authority in any part of Mexico know in the most unequivocal way that we shall vigilantly watch the fortunes of those Americans who can not get away, and shall hold those responsible for their sufferings and losses to a definite reckoning.

Now, Mr. President, mark the significance of those words. We should notify all those responsible for the suffering or injuries to Americans in Mexico that we should hold them to a definite reckoning. These were brave words, Mr. President, uttered in 1913. I should like to know, and I have no doubt other Members of Congress would like to know, whether in the recognition of a de facto or "first chief" government in Mexico the President of the United States has required of him assurances that those guilty of inflicting suffering and outrage upon the citizens of the United States should be held to a "definite reckoning." I should like to know, and I have no doubt other Members of Congress would like to know, whether there was any arrangement made prior to the recognition of the Government of Mexico with reference to payments for damages heretofore done, damages caused by destruction of property, by destruction of life, by assaults upon American citizens. I should like to know, and I have no doubt Congress would like to know, whether similar words to those uttered by Evarts, Secretary of State, and McCrary, Secretary of War, in 1877 and 1878, have been uttered by this administration prior to the recognition of a de facto government in Mexico.

Mr. President, I am for one tired of seeing the United States, by treaty, by act, by recognition, tied hand and feet as this administration has demanded that it do tie itself in everything, and then get nothing. I want to know before I vote to confirm an ambassador to any Mexican government whether any assurances have been given by that government that outrages shall be, at least, paid for. The general impression seems to be that any foreign nation can with a few dollars satisfy the conscience of the people of the United States and continue to perpetrate such outrages as they may choose to perpetrate upon its citizens. I should like to know whether when allowing the land forces of Mexico to pass through our borders for the purpose of crushing one faction in Mexico we had secured from the faction we were assisting with our forces any assurances that damages heretofore done should be paid for and that damages hereafter to be inflicted, if any are inflicted, should be recompensed at any rate. What assurances have we? Are we not entitled to that information before we are asked to confirm an ambassador? Clearly, Mr. President, I think we are.

Mr. President, I might take up much more time of the Senate in discussing this matter, and I shall have much more to say about it in the future. I have not attempted to go into Mexican affairs this morning, but simply to discuss this resolution from the standpoint that it should be adopted, and that the request contained in it should be complied with. I know that if that information is not obtained I may be able hereafter to impart some from knowledge which I possess.

Mr. President, one phase of this matter which impresses me very strongly is this. If Carranza has been recognized by this Government lately, it would not be the first time that we had practically recognized Mr. Carranza and put him in power in Mexico. We invited him into what is known as the Niagara Conference—the A B C mediation—which was called for the purpose of settling troubles between Woodrow Wilson and Victoriana Huerta concerning a certain flag incident. We invited Carranza to send delegates to that mediation in the attempt to settle the entire Mexican question.

Shortly after the adjournment at Niagara Falls Mr. Huerta left Mexico, turning the city and the archives over to Mr. Carbajal. The Government of the United States was called upon to obtain assurances from Carranza, before permitting him to take over the reins of government from Carbajal, for the protection of life and property in the City of Mexico of Mexican citizens and of foreign citizens, as well as those of citizens of the United States. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the newspaper reports to the effect that this Government refused to demand such assurances at that time were correct. I have no other source of knowledge.

Carranza took charge of the City of Mexico; and there is this difference between the status at that time and at the present: He has not dared to go into the City of Mexico since his recent recognition by this Government. The newspapers on yesterday reported that Mr. Carranza had called Pablo Gonzales, his officer in command in the City of Mexico, and Alvaro Obregon, the commander of the Department of the North, into consultation with him; that the matter to be considered, as given out from the State Department to the newspapers—not to Congress—was the re-formation of a cabinet. Now, recall for a moment the fact that, in so far as our information goes, Mr. Carranza does not even pretend to be the president pro tempore of Mexico, and is, as we read through the newspapers in the words from the State Department, recognized by this Government as the "first chief of the de facto government" of Mexico. Yet we are now told that he is forming a cabinet and has summoned two of his generals there for the purpose, apparently or presumably, of assisting or counseling in the formation of a cabinet.

Where is this meeting to be held—in the capital of Mexico? Not at all. Under the constitution of Mexico, under the laws of Mexico, Mexico City is the capital of Mexico. This meeting is to be held either in the town of San Luis Potosi or of Queretaro, between 100 and 300 miles from the City of Mexico. Why not in the city, if there is a government in Mexico fit to be recognized by this Government? Why should not the formation of a cabinet at least be left until Mr. Carranza takes full charge in the City of Mexico? Is it possible that the rumors afloat on the border, throughout Mexico, and in various parts of this country are true that Pablo Gonzales occupies one portion of the City of Mexico and Emiliano Zapata the other, and that they are jointly levying taxes and dividing the revenues between them? Is it possible that the rumors are correct that Mr. Carranza occupies and controls Tampico bay, city, and harbor, and that the great oil fields of Tuxpam are controlled by the Villistas, and that the Villistas and the Carranzistas are jointly levying taxes upon the owners of the oil wells there and dividing the revenue? We have no knowledge about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Do I correctly understand the Senator from New Mexico to say that Mr. Carranza does not even pretend to be the President of Mexico?

Mr. FALL. He does not; and not only does he not pretend to be so, but, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me to answer him in my own words, the cause of the breach between Carranza and his generals was that upon their written demand, signed by Alvaro Obregon, commander in chief of the Department for the Northwest, and Francisco Villa, the commander in chief of the Department of the North, he refused to become president pro tempore.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My purpose in asking that question, Mr. President, is to further ask the Senator from New Mexico to whom the ambassador, whose name has been sent to the Senate for confirmation, purports to be accredited?

Mr. FALL. I can not answer from knowledge. I am asking information from the President upon that subject. I can only answer upon the best of my information and belief. He is designated officially by the Government of the United States as "the first chief of the de facto government of Mexico." I think that is his official designation, as carried in the Department of State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from New Mexico does not mean to say that the President has so designated an ambassador?

Mr. FALL. My information, sir, is that he is so designated by the Department of State, at least.

Mr. LODGE. Carranza is so designated.

Mr. FALL. That Carranza is so designated by the Department of State of this Government, and that we are now being asked to send an ambassador to the first chief of the de facto government of Mexico.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. An ambassador to a first chief?

Mr. FALL. An ambassador to a first chief; remarkable, sir, as that may sound to the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And not to the second chief?

Mr. FALL. We have had ambassadors, but not so designated, to the second, third, fourth, and fifth chiefs. We have had "ambassadors," confidential agents, to Villa, to Pablo Gonzales, to Mytorena, to Carranza, to Zapata, and to how many others I do not know. Of course, not constitutional "ambassadors," but "personal representatives."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senate was not asked to confirm those gentlemen?

Mr. FALL. No; nor has the Senate been informed as to them, Mr. President. I am asking in this resolution that the Senate be informed as to the reports of these confidential agents. I know that we have no right to demand such information; it is simply a question as to whether the President chooses to give to Congress the information upon which he has apparently acted in the recognition of some one as a first chief of a de facto government of Mexico, and to whom he asks you to accredit an ambassador.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. The Senator has referred to two or three different places where rumor states that the Villa and the Carranza people are levying taxes or tribute, or something of that kind, and dividing it up. The Senator says we have no information. Have we none of our confidential agents or representatives of our Government at any of those points who might furnish it?

Mr. FALL. Certainly we have.

Mr. JONES. Could they not furnish us information as to whether or not these rumors are true?

Mr. FALL. Provided the President thinks it "compatible with the public interests" to inform the people of the United States, through their representatives, they can, I presume, furnish the information.

Mr. JONES. The Senator's resolution would cover that information?

Mr. FALL. The resolution is intended to cover that.

Mr. President, I do not wonder that the President expressed doubt as to whether our actions in Mexico will be of any benefit when I recall the fact that with our troops at Vera Cruz, making it possible for him to do so, Mr. Carranza once before entered the City of Mexico and proceeded to discharge the duties of "first chief," refusing, as I have said, to become President pro tempore. Of course, the Senator from Connecticut understands why this refusal was made. Others may not understand, and therefore I will state that I presume it was because under the Mexican constitution if he proclaimed himself or allowed himself to be proclaimed President pro tempore he could not succeed himself and be a candidate for election at the general election for the presidency.

I am not going to weary the Senate, Mr. President, with an account or attempted account of what took place during Carranza's three months' administration in Mexico, when he had practically the same recognition extended him as he has now, when our troops were still at Vera Cruz, where they could maintain or assist in maintaining him in power; but I am going to ask in closing that there be printed with my remarks in the RECORD a portion of page 7 of the New York World of Sunday, December 13, 1914. The reporter for the World assumes to give a correct account of what took place during the Carranza administration in the City of Mexico. The paper itself, I believe, is recognized as authority in some circles, and I for one desire to say that I recognize it as a very great newspaper; and when I saw an article such as this, covering several columns, published in that paper I presumed, as I have a right to presume, that the information contained was as correct as it was possible to give it. The correspondent writes from the City of Mexico just as the Carranzistas are evacuating that city. After speaking of the innumerable horrors, of the outrages perpetrated, and then referring to the enforced evacuation of the city by Mr. Carranza, the correspondent closes:

Scenes at the Buenavista Station of the Mexican Railway reminded one of a thousand moving days combined. Train after train drew out in the direction of Vera Cruz loaded down with every conceivable sort of plunder—motors, furniture, horses, pianos, paintings, safes. It was a sight to make professional burglars and second-story men weep with envy. Nothing like it was ever seen on this continent. Huerta and his mob were amateurs compared with the Carranzistas. The Huerta crowd seldom stooped to petty larceny. If a town or government was ever subjected to the vacuum-cleaner method of pillage, it was the capital of Mexico at the hands of the Carranzistas.

There are other extracts which I might read couched in equally strong language, Mr. President, but I will simply ask, before closing, that the article to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

[The article referred to will be found at the end of Mr. FALL'S remarks.]

Mr. FALL. Now, Mr. President, I want to say that I am asking the Senate to join me in requesting this information from the President, not now in a spirit of criticism toward the President for anything which he may have done. He may have done—and I say so frankly—the best thing possible in recognizing some one with whom we might officially deal in Mexico and recognizing him in some capacity where he might be held responsible. I in common with every other citizen of the United States knowing anything about Mexico, Mr. President, do hope from the bottom of my heart that the doubt expressed by the President may in a short time be removed, and that the results may prove that his action in dealing with Mexico has been for the benefit of that country; but I hope as sincerely—and I am selfish enough to say it, because I am one who is not governed entirely by sentimental considerations for alien people alone—I do hope, sir, that the result of such action will be proven in a short time to have been for the benefit of American citizens in Mexico and of the United States generally.

Remember, Mr. President, that the brave words spoken by the President in his message in saying that those responsible for damages or for injuries to American citizens would be held "strictly accountable" have a familiar sound. We have since read something of the same character in the newspapers. If I recall correctly, almost a similar phrase was used in a note to a great power in February, prior to the sinking of the Lusitania. In that note, the words "strict accountability" were used. It may be possible, Mr. President, that—and it is a matter for future consideration—when, after uttering such words as these, we allowed American citizens to be shot down, not only in Mexico but within our own borders, and when our own troops placed on the border to guard American citizens were shot to the number of 47 and were withdrawn 3 miles behind a hill, where they might be safe from Mexican bullets—it may be possible, when we continued to permit American women to be outraged in Mexico, that, even without a hint thrown to the ambassador of a foreign nation, those strong words used in that note prior to the sinking of the Lusitania were construed to be simply for home consumption. It may be, sir, that, without that rumored intimation, but in view of our action in Mexico or of our failure to act after similar words, other Governments have conceived such a contempt for this Government that they imagine they can with impunity continue to attack and murder American citizens.

The article from the New York World of Sunday, December 13, 1914, which Mr. FALL secured permission to have printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

CARRANZA CROWD IN BIG SCRAMBLE FOR LOOT IN END—HE HIMSELF HAD BEEN "MERELY TOLERATED AS A FIGUREHEAD OF A SO-CALLED GOVERNMENT BY THE GANG OF GRAFTERS, INCOMPETENTS, ADVENTURERS, AND HIGHBINDERS WHO SURROUND HIM"—NEVER HAD ANY REAL POWER IN THE MEXICAN CAPITAL—DIDN'T DEAL SQUARE WITH AMERICAN GOVERNMENT—DELIBERATELY PLANNED TO LEAVE THE CITY DEFENSELESS IN THE HOPE THAT THE ZAPATISTAS WOULD COME IN AND "LOOT, BURN, AND KILL"—FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES IGNORED WARNING, AND BLANCO DECEIVED THEM.

MEXICO CITY, November 30.

Some indication was given several weeks ago by the writer hereof of conditions in this city under the rule of Carranza. It was apparent at that time that precisely those conditions—wholesale and ruthless confiscation of houses, automobiles, and other private property, relentless political prosecutions and a general all-around disposition to grab rather than to govern—demonstrated clearly to anyone who chose to read the signs right that Carranza's days of power were numbered.

"Days of power" is a misnomer. Carranza while in Mexico City never had any real days of power, nor of authority either. He merely was tolerated as a figurehead of a so-called government by the gang of grafters, incompetents, adventurers, and highbinders who surrounded him. They stood for Carranza because they could use him for their own ends; because he was too weak and impotent to check their prostitution of the position to which they had been elevated by revolutionary upheavel; because, in reality, they were the government and Carranza the subordinate factor. Upon his shoulders falls the blame, the ignominy, the contempt for the colossal debacle of his three months of maladministration in the capital of the republic.

It is nothing less than true to declare that aside from the carnival of grand and petit larceny that amazed and disgusted all beholders through the 90 days that the Carranza gang had the town by the throat the only two accomplishments of his administration which one remembers readily are these, the presentation of Huerta's grand piano to the prisoners in Belem, to be used for their amusement, and the setting aside for hospital purposes of the premises of the aristocratic Jockey Club in Avenida San Francisco. Merely this and nothing more.

LEFT A NEW VERB BEHIND HIM.

What was presaged in late September now has come to pass. Carranza and what followers remained loyal to the national treasury and him have retired in the general direction of Vera Cruz. Behind them they have left a rank odor and a new verb to enrich the Spanish language—"carranciar" (meaning "to steal"). This creation is the quaint conceit of the nimble wits of the cafés, but it has been adopted generally by the populace. For instance, when Gen. Pacheco, the generalissimo in charge of the Zapatista forces in the Federal District, came riding into town the other day some of his admirers sought to give him a fine white horse, one of those left behind by Gen. Lucio Blanco when he ran away last week. The general, a typical old Indian in appearance, looked over the steed carefully and grunted: "Carranciada, no?" Or, in English, "Stolen, what?" Then he waved back the horse upon those who sought to present it, with this comment: "Very fine for the city, but for campaigning through the country give me my good old plug here," indicating a dejected-appearing pony, with numerously branded flanks, that stood near by with drooping head and battered accouterments.

CAUSES OF CARRANZA'S FAILURE.

One does not need to seek afar to locate the causes for Carranza's failure. They are not esoteric. Sheer stupidity and pig-headedness are two of them. Inherent incompetence for governing is another. Lack of a sense of proportion is a fourth. Consuming and bitter jealousy and hatred of Villa figure in the list. There are others too numerous to mention.

Carranza established himself in the national palace and surrounded himself with as dazzling an array of small, incompetent men as could be found in a day's search among the unemployed haunting the intelligence offices of Sixth Avenue. There was not in the whole cabinet a man above the level of mediocrity, excepting Villareal, his first minister of finance, who resigned rather than stand for Carranza's foolishness. Three or four of the ministers were rather flash fellows, who spoke English well and, so far as surface indications went, looked to be "the goods." But they weren't by a long shot. These fellows, aided by some of the military jefes, twisted and manipulated Carranza to suit their ends, fanned the flame of his antagonism to Villa, and largely aided by their advice and machinations in bringing about the final and open break between Carranza and Villa.

While Carranza was blundering and maundering futilely over affairs of state in the national palace and scheming how to chisel Villa out and cement himself in the other fellows were running the town and the alleged government to suit themselves. It is impossible to point to a single constructive act performed by Carranza while in office or to any intelligent, virile effort put forth to combine the discordant elements in the constitutionalist ranks with the idea of getting the country back on a peaceable, effecively working basis.

NOT HONEST WITH WASHINGTON.

The man was not even honest and square in his dealings with the United States Government, which, as everyone knows, did as much as the constitutionalists themselves to rid the country of Huerta. He lied, shuffled, quibbled, and was absurdly arrogant in his official dealings with those whom Washington has to represent it here. There is not the shadow of a doubt that Carranza gave his approval to a wicked essay on the part of one of his officeholders to arouse the people to repeat the anti-American demonstration that took place here in April last. This was done by a manifesto purporting to be issued by Mexican members of the Masonic fraternity, calling upon the citizens to arm and oppose the continuance of the occupation of Vera Cruz by the American forces. Carranza had already left the capital when this pleasant scheme was hatched. He was mightily worried lest the Americans should not quit the port in time for him to take refuge there before the advance of the Villistas. The manifesto fell flat.

Finally, in desperation, Carranza was forced to do what he had before repeatedly and impudently refused—to accede, as the price of evacuation of the port, reasonable guaranties respecting the legalizing of Funston's acts there and protection for the lives, persons, and properties of the citizens of the port. These given, we promptly got out, and Carranza took earth in Vera Cruz.

As this is being written—as an example of how Carranza kept his promise—news has come of an attempt to levy a forced loan of 6,000,000 pesos upon the banks and commerce of the city and of the landing of marines to protect foreign property in the customhouse from being looted by Carranza's men.

Egged on by the people around him, Carranza imposed conditions relative to his retirement from office that were calculated to render them impossible of acceptance and to force Villa into the field. Carranza might not have had the thing in his mind, but it is impossible, viewing his acts dispassionately, to escape the conclusion that he was working might and main to insure his election as President; certainly he left nothing undone to drive Villa out of the country. Carranza and his crowd clamored that the peace of Mexico and the triumph of the cause of the common people demanded the elimination of Villa from participation in all public affairs.

CAUSE OF THE COMMON PEOPLE.

The cause of the common people received marked consideration under the first chieftainship of Carranza. He encouraged a strike of the tramway employees, who demanded more pay and shorter hours. With promise of government support, they struck and tied up the lines for a week. Thus a condition was created which gave the government an excuse for stepping in and doing what the grafters had been itching to do ever since they struck town—confiscate the tramways and the light and power properties. But when they tried it their courage failed in the face of the loud protests that came from the British and American diplomatic representatives. So they contented themselves with placing an intervenor in charge of the properties and ordering the strikers back to work at the same hours and rates of wage as before.

Other measures for ameliorating the condition of the poor took the form of a compulsory eight-hour workday, which none of the workers wanted; of providing all the cooks and domestic servants with a full holiday on the Sabbath, which none of them cared a whoop about; and of rendering it impossible for anyone to buy a pint of milk or a loaf of bread before 8 o'clock in the morning or 3 in the afternoon. This last had the effect of sending the honest Mexican workingman—whose wife purchases her supplies as and when she wants them—to his daily toil breakfastless because of the impossibility of purchasing food under the rule of Venustiano the Virtuous before 8 a. m., which is rather late for 6 o'clock breakfasters.

A VILLISTA CONVENTION.

Carranza had wit enough to see, in advance of the convening of the convention of October 10, that there was an imminent possibility of representatives designated by the convention seeking him with the bowstring. The convention was clearly Villista in its sympathies, although not overwhelmingly so. The generals close in, who were within reaching distance of Carranza and the capital, found the pickings so good and the life so easy that they were willing to stand for Carranza a while longer.

The out-and-out Villista generals and others who were not of the Carranza inner circle were determined to eliminate Carranza. But they wanted to do it peaceably. Carranza's supporters in the convention put it squarely up to the Villistas, so that either they had to consent to Carranza remaining at the head of government or unhorse him by rough tactics. The reluctance of the anti-Carranzista delegates to assume the responsibility of plunging the country anew into civil war accounts for the backing and filling, the sparring and side stepping, that took place for nearly a month before the convention finally told Carranza to get out and put Gutierrez temporarily at the head of the Government.

The crack of doom sounded for Carranza the minute he allowed the transfer of the convention from this city to Aguascalientes. Had he been sure of his ground he would have put down his foot and said:

"Gentleman, this convention will meet according to the original program right here in my own bailiwick, where I can keep an eye on what's going on."

But the convention got away from him and his influence, did its work at Aguascalientes, and finally supplanted him.

For the second time the crack of doom sounded its ominous knell for Carranza when he placed in effect the preliminaries of the masterly piece of strategy which comprehended a general retreat all along the line, to be followed by a return in force to crush Villa here in Mexico City. Retreat is fatal to the cause of any leader in Mexico, no matter upon what specious grounds it may be urged, explained, or undertaken. Public opinion sees only the fact and accepts retreat as conclusive evidence that the jig is up with the retreating party.

PLANNING A "GETAWAY."

While he was jockeying with the convention and swapping propositions and counter propositions relative to the joint retirement of himself and Villa, Carranza and those in his confidence were quietly completing their arrangements for making their getaway. Three weeks ago Carranza slipped down to Puebla to spend Sunday and receive the enthusiastic plaudits of his supporters there. He was due back the following Monday. But he never came.

A week ago last Wednesday one of his generals divulged the whole scheme of campaign. It was, briefly, to abandon the capital, establish a temporary capital either at Puebla, Cordoba, or, if the Americans evacuated in time, Vera Cruz; strip Mexico City of troops, allow Villa to come in, circle about, cut him off from the north, and then simultaneously hurl the combined forces of Carranza's army upon him from the north, south, east, and west. Fine in theory, but punk in practice. The success of this plan, as everyone can see, depended upon whether Villa would be complacent enough to fall into the trap and permit himself to be eaten alive by his enemies. At last accounts no lunacy commissions were putting test questions to Villa or doing stunts with his reflexes.

TO LEAVE CITY DEFENSELESS.

Furthermore, it clearly appears in evidence that the Carranzistas deliberately schemed to abandon the city, leaving it defenseless, without a garrison, in the zealous hope that the Zapatistas, who had been kept at bay only by constant fighting in the suburbs ever since Carranza took possession of the city, would swoop into the capital to loot, burn, ravish, and kill. There is not the slightest doubt of this. Carranza, in order to balk Villa, was willing to, and did, expose not only the 15,000 foreigners here but the more than 200,000 of his own people to the tender mercies of the Zapatistas. He did not reckon nor did anyone, that the dreaded Zapatistas, when they did come, would behave a thousand times more humanely, patriotically, and more like honest men than the Carranzistas ever thought of doing.

Something of the consternation, almost frenzied terror, that pervaded the city when the people realized what confronted them may have been indicated to a degree in the censored dispatches of the newspaper correspondents, if any of them were allowed to pass. Whether they did or not, there is no means at present of knowing, in the complete isolation of the city, due to the lack of mail facilities and the restrictions placed upon the use of the cable.

DIPLOMATS APATHETIC.

For nearly 48 hours after a newspaper man had communicated to a certain diplomat full details of the projected abandonment of the city absolutely no steps were taken to prevent leaving the capital defenseless. Representatives here of foreign Governments who were seen a day after the diplomat in question, who was chosen as the recipient of the newspaper man's confidence because of his present predominant activity among his colleagues accredited to Mexico, knew nothing of the matter. Finally, after John R. Silliman, who was appealed to by two newspaper men and who appreciated the imminence of the danger, had received confirmation of the news from Gen. Pesquiera, the acting minister of war, the diplomatic corps began to bestir itself languidly.

The crisis was discussed incidentally at a meeting of the corps called to consider what action to take upon the much more vital proposition of whether or not to accept Carranza's invitation to join him at his temporary capital in Cordoba. If ever a diplomatic corps impressively demonstrated its utter uselessness and incompetency, it was the corps in this city during the 48 hours that ensued from a week ago last Wednesday until Friday. Without exception, they fluttered and fribbled futilely and accomplished absolutely nothing in the way of obtaining guarantees for their nationals and the rest of the inhabitants of the Mexican capital.

DECEIVED BY BLANCO.

At length, on Friday, Silliman elicited from Gen. Lucio Blanco assurances that he would remain here with his men to give guaranties to the city. Blanco, it was known, had been divided in his mind whether to adhere to Carranza or obey the will of the convention. Gen. Alvaro Obregon, a strong man, whose influence latterly has been exerted for evil rather than for good, strove hard to keep Blanco in line for Carranza. Blanco followed his promise to Silliman with a manifesto in which, as military commander of the city, he pledged himself to stay here at the head of his forces as long as necessary to keep order. Blanco became a popular hero overnight, not only among the Mexicans but with the foreigners also. Everyone breathed easy again.

On Sunday positive information came to a correspondent that Obregon had won over Blanco, and that Blanco, notwithstanding his assurances to Silliman, would take his men out of the capital with the remainder of the Carranzistas. Blanco and his friends denied this. On Monday night Silliman again called on Blanco and told him frankly that he had been informed that he could not be depended upon to keep his promise. Blanco protested vigorously that the rumor was untrue. Silliman went away satisfied that Blanco would stand true.

NEWSPAPER MEN THREATENED.

Blanco lied to Silliman. At the very moment he and Silliman were talking a manifesto over Blanco's name was being printed. In this manifesto Blanco attacked Villa bitterly and protested his allegiance to Carranza. Copies of this manifesto were given to at least one newspaper and to one correspondent. But Blanco recalled the document before it had scarcely left his hands and gave notice that if it were published or a copy of it were found in any person's possession death would be the penalty.

Blanco tumbled from his hero's pedestal quicker than he had attained it. He sneaked out of the city on Tuesday, followed by the reprobation and contempt of all classes. He left behind a manifesto saying that through lack of ammunition he found himself unable to resist the incoming Zapatistas and that rather than arouse the ire of the liberating army of the south by ineffectual resistance and expose the inhabitants of the city to the fury of Zapata's soldiers he had determined to retire.

In view of Blanco's plea of scarcity of ammunition it is interesting to note that yesterday there was found hidden away on the outskirts of the city, where it had been abandoned by Blanco in his flight, a million and a half rounds of cartridges and several thousand rifles. Still, the way things turned out, it probably was as well that Blanco did not stay.

In its last days the evacuation of the capital, which began, so far as the troops were concerned, on November 19 and ended on the 24th, was carried out on the sauve qui peut principle, which every big and little jefe enlarged so as not only to save himself but to save for himself as much of the loot of the national treasury and of the city as he could get his hands on.

Shameless theft was the order of the day. The treasury was cleaned out down to the last centavo. It is a fact that when the Zapatista temporary finance minister took account of stock he found 37,000 pesos in cash in the vaults in the national palace. This money represented payments that had been made after the Carranzista officials had decamped. Later, tucked away in a remote place in the treasury, where it evidently had been hidden and left behind, either through forgetfulness or lack of time in which to retrieve it, bank notes amounting to 137,000 pesos were unearthed.

One of Carranza's right-hand men, who had been conspicuous in the activities of the constitutionalist junta in Washington as a pleader for everything pure in politics and reform for his beloved country, distinguished himself by pouching 50,000 pesos and sallying forth for Vera Cruz with two stolen automobiles. The big thieves were preyed upon by little ones. An underling tore about town, frantically trying to change his master's 50,000 pesos into gold. He succeeded in netting about $6,000 gold for the entire lot, out of which he calmly sequestrated a thousand or so for himself by the ingenious process of reporting to his jefe that he had exchanged the pesos at 9 or 10 to 1 when the actual rate was considerably lower.

Three days before he levanted Gen. Obregon was allowed to draw from the treasury a million and a half pesos in cash "for the maintenance and pay of his forces." Every ounce of gold and silver in the casa de moneda or mint was taken out with Carranza. Also there went printing presses, plates, and the entire stock of bank-note paper in the government printing office. The public offices were stripped of fittings, inkstands, typewriters, furniture, rugs, carpets, and curtains. Even the huge presidential chair in the national palace was crated and borne off. It is estimated that automobiles valued at 3,000,000 pesos at least were taken out of the city by the advocates of "constitution and reform."

Scenes at the Buenavista Station of the Mexican Railway reminded one of a thousand moving days combined. Train after train drew out in the direction of Vera Cruz loaded down with every conceivable sort of plunder—motors, furniture, horses, pianos, paintings, safes. It was a sight to make professional burglars and second-story men weep with envy. Nothing like it was ever seen on this continent. Huerta and his mob were amateurs compared with the Carranzistas. The Huerta crowd seldom stooped to petty larceny. If a town or government was ever subjected to the vacuum-cleaner method of pillage, it was the capital of Mexico at the hands of the Carranzistas.

Every man jack of the outfit knew, too, when he turned his back upon Mexico City that the Carranza cause was hopelessly lost. Most of those who elected to unite with Carranza in his defiance of the convention did so for one of two reasons, occasionally for both. Either they knew that Villa would have none of them or else they accounted it more profitable personally to stand by and find foot room in the trough with the other Carranzistas, where they were reasonably certain of getting part of the swag, trusting to luck to make their peace with Villa later. It was not Carranza they were following; it was the gold. They got that, and now they are following the ridiculous Carranza no longer.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Constitution places in the hands of the President power to conduct all negotiations with foreign powers. I think that power is wisely placed, and I do not think that the Senate, although it has the unquestioned right to ask for information and to have it furnished if the President deems it compatible with the public interest, should take any steps at any time which would tend to interfere with or damage negotiations being carried on upon any subject. In this instance, however, we are dealing with accomplished facts, and we are asked now to take a share in the action of the administration.

The President has recognized somebody in Mexico. We know that, because he has sent in the name of an ambassador to Mexico. We are informed by the newspapers that the person so recognized is Carranza. We learn from the action of other Governments that he is recognized as "first chief of the de facto government of Mexico."

The right of the President of the United States to recognize a government in another country is, to my mind, undoubted. I think it is complete. I once had occasion some years ago to discuss that question when distinguished Senators on the other side took the view that the President by recognition of a certain government was engaging in a usurpation. I think the President then had the right to recognize, and I think he has it now. I think the President has the entire right to recognize some one in Mexico. He has done so, and has sent us the name of an ambassador—a most excellent choice, so far as I am aware. I have, moreover, no question that it is extremely desirable that we should have a representative in Mexico to take care, so far as he can, of such Americans as may remain there who have not been either murdered or driven out and of such fragments of property as may still exist. I think it is very desirable that we should have an ambassador there; but as we are asked now to take part in the recognition by confirming the ambassador, it does not seem to me that it is unreasonable to make the inquiry embodied in the resolution of the Senator from New Mexico.

The Senate of the United States, which is asked to confirm an ambassador, has no official knowledge of what has been recognized in Mexico. We learn through the newspapers—an excellent but unofficial source, not recognized in the Constitution—that the Government has recognized Carranza. I think we might have that information officially. I think we might also be allowed to know to whom our minister is accredited. I do not think it is a diseased curiosity on our part to wish to know where our ambassador is going. One of the well-recognized evidences of the fitness of a Government for recognition is the possession of the capital, of the normal seat of government in the country. Is our ambassador to go to the City of Mexico, into which Gen. Carranza has not gone—governed, we are informed, in his abstention, by a judicious regard for his personal safety? Or is our ambassador to follow Carranza's flitting and fleeting camp, wherever it may happen to be, from Vera Cruz to San Luis Potosi, or to Torreon, or somewhere else? Where is our ambassador going?

I say, Mr. President, it does not seem to me that it shows an unreasonable curiosity to ask for this information. These are all accomplished acts in which we are asked to share. The time of negotiation and dealing has passed. I think, also, we may fairly ask what has been learned by the agents who have been sent down there—for we have been passing lately from the ordinary régime of duly confirmed and appointed diplomatic officers to transacting business with foreign nations, not only in Mexico but elsewhere, through furtive agents of a personal character. We ought to know, I think, what the information is that has led the President to take this important step.

I repeat that I think the selection of Mr. Fletcher is a most excellent one. I have not the least objection to having him sent as an ambassador; but I should like to know to whom he is accredited, where he is going, and what were the grounds for the recognition of the "first chief" of the de facto government.

This has been done by Presidents time out of mind, either in annual or in special messages. They have not thought it improper to tell the Senate upon what convincing considerations they have decided to recognize a government. We were informed through the newspapers that this country had received guaranties, assurances for religious toleration, and security of life and property in Mexico. I think we might fairly have those assurances laid before us and be told how far they have been carried out. I think we might fairly know what arrangement, if any, has been made for the payment of claims with the government thus recognized. There are very large claims of American citizens pending against the government of Mexico whenever that government shall be duly established; and, what is far worse, in my opinion, by our course there we have placed ourselves in a position where we may very well be held responsible for enormous claims by the citizens of other countries, because we have intervened to such an extent as to overthrow a recognized government, a government recognized by other countries. When we took that serious step we opened the door to the possibility of huge claims against us on account of Mexico, claims beyond the reach of any practical estimate.

Now, we have recognized another government. I know little or nothing of its character. On this point, too, I should like to be informed. In common with everybody else, such information as I get I secure through newspapers or through correspondence in one way and another.

I received the other day a circular of one of the Carranza military governors. The State of Yucatan was a perfectly peaceful State. It had not been involved in revolution. It had not resisted Carranza. It had kept clear. But Carranza, as "first chief" of the de facto government, sent down there, wiped out the legislature, wiped out the civil governor, wiped out the courts, and established a military governor, who is now in absolute and despotic control. Whether he is doing what Pablo Gonzales and Zapata are said to be doing in the City of Mexico I do not know; but I read this translation of a portion of a circular sent out by Gen. Alvarado, Carranzista governor of Yucatan, to his assistants on October 27, 1915. I read it because religious toleration was one of the subjects on which we were said to have received assurances. The circular says:

> * * * And, in a word, it is necessary to remove all fanaticism from the State. The powerful effort made by the false apostles of religion, who are eager and insatiable for blood, money, and power, since the Spanish conquest have been forming links in our land of a chain of the most shocking crimes, misfortunes, and treasons—with their net infested with untruths have brutalized our country and disintegrated it. Their end is near. They fly, frightened and ashamed, to bury themselves in oblivion, accompanied by the opposition and by ignorance, the constitutional revolution remaining as symbolizing the beneficent light of science.

Now—

We should always remember that religion is ignorance and that God wanes whilst the revolution advances.

I do not know whether that statement, that "God wanes whilst the revolution advances," represents the ideas of religious toleration of the Carranza government or not; but it certainly is an indication of the character of his military governors. As we have recognized Carranza, as we are asked to confirm an ambassador accredited, I suppose, to him—I can only make the assumption—I think it would be not unreasonable that we should know something about it.

I have no question that the President had good reasons and sufficient information for recognizing Carranza. I can not imagine that he would have done it without good reason; and I do not think it is improper or unfair for us, now that we are asked to confirm an ambassador, to be permitted to share those reasons. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

I ask permission to print with my remarks a description of Mexico at the present time which appeared in the New York Sun, which is written with great sobriety and thoroughness, and which I think is very valuable as a source of information as to present conditions in Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Sun of Sunday, Dec. 26, 1915.]

MEXICO, LOOTED AND BESET WITH BANDITRY, STAGGERS TO ITS RECONSTRUCTION—A NEW YORK OBSERVER, IN REVIEWING THE CONDITIONS AFTER FIVE YEARS OF REVOLUTION, FINDS THE SITUATION CALLS FOR THE HIGHEST STATESMANSHIP—FINANCES AND RAILROADS A BIG PROBLEM.

Conditions in Mexico City, after five years of revolution, confusion, and looting, are graphically described by a New Yorker just back from the capital after many years of residence there.

Sixteen radical changes in government were seen in the city in the five years, each one as bad as the other. Wholesale liberation of prisoners went with each one, and each faction went away leaving behind a trail of bad money.

Prices have risen and risen until now they can not go any higher, and the Carranza government is trying to force them down.

Stocks have been running low. Idleness, strikes, disease, and lack of medicines have nearly put the finishing touches on the desolation of the city.

The constitutionalist officers, or most of them, in control of Mexico at the present time are a carousing, venturesome, fighting crowd, who know no peaceful pursuit. Most of them have no education.

Textile factories, one of Mexico's richest industries, have been destroyed or shut down for a long period. Sugar and mine properties are not being worked in full. Crops have been confiscated and little planting has been done.

The Carranza authorities have been active in forcing the banks to guarantee their notes with currency. Foreign capital is no friend of Carranza because of his many decrees.

Many new kinds of taxes have been clapped on or are planned, as Carranza is desperately in need of funds.

The saloons have not obeyed the decree to move, paying heavy tribute to stay where they are.

The writer's version of conditions follows:

REVOLT FIVE YEARS OLD IN NOVEMBER.

The Mexican revolution was 5 years old on November 20, 1915. The period since Francisco I. Madero issued the plan of San Luis Potosi and raised the banner of revolt against the aged Diaz has witnessed many startling changes in the Republic just south of the Rio Grande.

These five years just closed have been punctuated by the resignation and death in exile of the octogenarian dictator, Gen. Porfirio Diaz; Madero's rise to power; Pascual Orozco's revolt, subsequent exile, and recent violent death in Texas as an obscure filibuster; the citadel uprising in Mexico City and the assassination of President Madero and Vice President Pino Suarez; Huerta's short and bloody dictatorship; Villa's meteoric career of wholesale banditry; and, finally, the quarrel of the revolutionary factional leaders and the military predominance of Gen. Venustiano Carranza.

To-day the Carranza movement is at its zenith and the first chief, depository of the executive power, finds himself with the military part of his task virtually completed and facing the problems of reconstruction, with material, political, and social tangles to unravel which would test the financial ability of a Morgan, the diplomacy of a Talleyrand, and the iron will of a Cromwell.

November 20 was an official holiday throughout all the territory of Mexico controlled by the forces of Gen. Carranza. As sworn enemies of everything connected with the two Diazes, the aristocracy and the church, who had always held together, and as upholders of the innovations promised by President Madero as well as others of their own proposing, the followers of Gen. Carranza celebrated the day with rejoicing. The public offices were closed and there were street parades of soldiers headed by bands playing the national anthem.

NOT GREATLY ENTHUSED.

The noncombatants and nonofficial element of the City of Mexico, about five hundred times as numerous as the military men and Government employees who were celebrating, looked on at the demonstration without great enthusiasm. During the five years whose lapse was being proclaimed they had 16 radical changes of rule in the capital, all of which were heralded with bombastic manifestos and triumphal parades on the part of the new authorities and their armed followers, promises of reform and persecution of political opponents ("traitors"), and most of which ended with cannonading and death in the streets, precipitate midnight flights of the authorities before the advancing hosts of the hostile faction, terror and looting between dark and daylight, wholesale liberation of prisoners from the jails and penitentiaries, and, during the past year or so, the overnight declaration of the worthlessness of such money of the fleeing faction as was left in the hands of a hungry public and the establishment of the paper of the new arrivals as legal tender; all this attended with progressive poverty, ruin, and demoralization.

While these changes were taking place prices were climbing, stocks of food, clothing, and medicines running low, the paper money of all the factions approaching a shinplaster status, business enterprises failing and closing their doors, idleness, strikes, sickness, and misery becoming general, and the struggle for existence growing into a bitter, desperate, and almost hopeless task.

The fifth anniversary of political and economic insecurity had just been preceded by recognition of the de facto government of Gen. Carranza on the part of the United States and other countries, and there had been some talk of general pacification and reconstruction, but there was nothing new in such announcements by the authorities. The fulsome official press of the different factions always had made this subject its principal theme, and the Mexican public awaited deeds rather than words.

NOT HOPEFUL OF PEACE.

A condition of gloomy skepticism still prevails among the thinking classes as to the return of peace and security, despite the unquestioned military predominance of the Carranza followers, or constitutionalists, as they style themselves, who now control the greater part of the territory of the Republic and whose ultimate triumph over the Villa and Zapata factions is looked upon as a foregone conclusion.

The residents of Mexico, foreign and native, consider the constitutionalist officials and military men as their own worst enemies at the present time. They have by far the greater part of the guns and ammunition existing in the country; they are at the zenith of their military prestige, and none thinks of joining the Villistas or Zapatistas in their losing fight against the triumphant party as it stands to-day.

On the contrary, considerable numbers of the losing factions' fighting men are surrendering and joining the ranks of Gen. Carranza's followers, who now comprise former officers and men of the old Federal army who fought under Porfirio Diaz and Huerta, old revolutionaries of Madero's time, men of Pascual Orozco's revolt in the north against Madero, turbulent Yaquis from Sonora "serranos" from the mountains of Puebla and Oaxaca—in a word, men who all their lives have been trained to look upon fighting as a profession, or professional revolutionists who during the past five years have learned to scorn the peaceful pursuits they followed before Madero's time, and prefer a life of carousing, adventure, graft, and pillage.

The general doubt as to the prospects for establishing peace throughout the Republic rests upon the well-known character of these men, who are going to be pretty hard to satisfy with anything out of the line of the license which they have been enjoying and the ambition, jealousy, and greed of their chiefs, who will be difficult to make content with such political rewards as may be assigned them.

All of the revolutionary leaders have excellent opinions of themselves. Their standard of education is not high. Not one officer or general in several hundred has the equivalent of an American high-school education. Many can scarcely read and write. So far as civic education goes events have proved that they are mere children.

Their idea is to secure commissions or appointments by force, threats, or favoritism of their superiors, and if disappointed their first thought is revenge by joining the armed enemies of those who should have helped them, overthrowing or exterminating the latter and securing what they wanted by this means.

FEAR CARRANZISTAS WILL FACE REVOLT—NONCOMBATANTS EXPECT PARTY WILL AGAIN SPLIT INTO FACTIONS.

Mexican history shows very few examples of defeated candidates accepting their fate with resignation except during the 30 years' reign of Gen. Porfirio Diaz, who saw to it that they did. The times of President Diaz are gone forever, and thoughtful Mexicans and foreigners are wondering which of the revolutionary leaders—if peace is to come—will be willing to sacrifice themselves and to retire to private life or accept humble positions without a murmur, while their rivals receive glittering and productive honors.

If a miracle does not happen and the majority do not do this, the followers of Carranza will be torn by dissensions and the "revolution" will continue.

The number of generals, colonels, and lieutenant colonels now becoming rich through the perquisites of the revolution who five years ago were simple storekeepers, ranchers, and artisans is legion.

The problem of contenting them will be harder for Gen. Carranza or whoever succeeds him at the head of affairs than any of his predecessors as chiefs of revolutionary movements.

Banditry was ubiquitous when Gen. Porfirio Diaz took hold of the affairs of the nation, but the people had not "awakened" at that time and his remarkable personality was able to cow them into submission and order. Since Madero called upon them to "awaken" they have grown more and more to scorn the principles of government, and resort to their own brute force for the settlement of every question, petty or great, as it suits their personal advantage. The tendency of the Mexican middle and lower classes is not toward socialism but anarchy. Aristocracy and wealth are becoming crimes against which the most criminal behavior is pardoned.

Both Mexican and foreign anarchists are numbered among the personages of the warring factions of the Republic and some of them have been given posts of considerable authority. They have incited laborers everywhere to strike for higher wages, shorter hours, and special privileges.

Higher wages, it is generally conceded, are but a matter of justice at the present time, when the struggle for existence is bitter in Mexico, but the labor unions organized into a general federation known as the "Casa del Obrero Mundia" for the purpose of bringing on sympathetic strikes and exerting greater pressure upon employers and the public generally have listened spellbound to avowed "red" anarchists and have made their demands so exorbitant that in many cases employers, likewise losing money from the hard times, have been forced out of business temporarily or permanently.

The different revolutionary régimes have complicated this matter by taking over or confiscating for their own operations the concerns which are closed through strikes, which the revolutionaries themselves openly and officially encouraged. As they have allowed the properties of those concerns, mostly foreign, to go to ruin and have paid no dividends and bought no new material worthy of mention to replace what was worn out or destroyed, they have been able to operate and pay higher wages than the original management.

GOVERNMENT HAS BIG CLAIMS TO SETTLE—BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND RAILROADS SEEK INDEMNITY.

A large per cent of the revolutionary claims to be made against the next constituted government of Mexico will be based upon the losses suffered by different business enterprises on this score. Another and even greater percentage of the claims for indemnity will be made by the railway companies, the express companies, and others which have been taken over by the revolutionary administrations on the score of military necessities or for other purposes not clearly defined by the authorities.

The different railway companies whose properties have been taken over and operated by the revolutionary authorities will base their claims against the recognized government upon the railway laws of Mexico. These specify that in cases of domestic or foreign war the properties of the railways may be taken over by the authorities and that, if no other basis of settlement satisfactory to all parties is reached, the companies are to receive an indemnization for the use of their properties based upon the average earnings for the five years prior to their being taken over, plus 10 per cent of those same earnings.

This indemnization is merely for the use of the railway properties and does not include claims made by the companies for damage or destruction of their lines or rolling stock or for running of military trains prior to the taking over of the property, these constituting separate causes for indemnity. The Mexican law does not make it quite clear whether the earnings specified in calculating the amount of indemnity are to be net or gross earnings, but assuming that net earnings are meant, which is the most optimistic construction for the Mexican Government, the amount of damages to be paid will be enormous.

NATIONAL'S BILL BIGGEST.

Of all these railway claims which will be made, the most important is that of the National Railways of Mexico, the majority of whose bonds are held in Europe and the United States. The properties of this company were taken over for operation by the constitutionalists on August 13, 1914, thus making it something less than a year and a half that the revolutionary forces have had these properties in their possession. The net earnings of the National Railways for the years preceding their taking over were approximately as follows: 1908–9, 2,600,000 pesos; 1909–10, 4,500,000; 1910–11, 2,550,000; 1911–12, 2,480,000; 1912–13, 725,000; 1913–14, loss.

The settlement of the claims of the National Railways of Mexico will present various complications owing to special circumstances entering into the case. One of these is that the years immediately preceding the taking over of the properties by the constitutionalists were not normal years, the earnings being diminished notably toward their close and serving as a barometer of the spread of disorder throughout the country.

Another complicating feature is the rate of exchange. The figures given as earnings represent pesos with the rate of exchange for the American dollar at two for one. During the fiscal year of 1913–14, when a loss was registered, the value of the peso diminished to three to one. Should the government propose to settle claims on this basis in the present Mexican money, which is worth about 15 to 1 as measured by the dollar, foreign stock and bondholders hardly could be made to see the equity of the arrangement.

Still another feature is that after the break between Villa and Carranza the former kept and still controls a portion of the lines of the National Railways in the north of the Republic. As the Mexican law relating to indemnities to be paid to the railway companies relates only to the taking over of their lines by the government, liability for Villa's taking over a portion of them, he being declared an outlaw, probably will serve as another ground for contention.

INABILITY TO PAY BONDS.

Other matters which will enter into consideration are the Mexican government's ownership of a slight controlling interest in the shares of the National Railways and its ability or inability to satisfy the bondholders as to the payment of their interests, they being the real owners of the railways with power to foreclose on the stockholders if unsatisfied in this regard.

In any event, the claims arising from the government's use of the lines of the National Railways will be small in comparison with the material losses which the railway company has suffered through the blowing up and destruction of its trains and bridges, tearing up of its lines, wear and tear of rolling stock, damage to stations, shops and the like.

The following figures were given out officially by the constitutionalists recently and serve to throw some light upon the condition of the rollong stock of the National Railways at the close of June, 1914, and at the present time:

On June 30, 1914, the company had 15,700 broad-gauge cars, 3,267 narrow-gauge cars, and 762 locomotives. A short time ago the number of broad-gauge cars in the possession of the authorities holding the properties was 3,775, of which 150 were in the repair shops. This represents a shrinkage of 11,925 broad-gauge cars, apart from the damages to the 150 mentioned.

The number of narrow-gauge cars recently stated to be in the possession of the authorities was 1,925, of which 125 were in the shops for repairs. The loss of narrow-gauge cars, therefore, according to these figures is 1,342, apart from those damaged. The recent figures show that the authorities hold 490 locomotives in serviceable condition and have 160 in the repair shops. This shows a loss of 272 locomotives, apart from those damaged.

Such rolling material as is in the hands of Villa in the north at the present time must be discounted from the figures given showing losses, but the constitutionalist authorities say that he has very few cars and engines now in his possession.

VILLA'S HOLDINGS SMALL.

The fact is the constitutionalist forces are universally reported to be well within the State of Chihuahua in their northern advance against Villa, and he only controls a small portion of the Central Railway (belonging to the National Railways) from Ciudad Juarez to a short distance south of the city of Chihuahua. The amount of rolling stock Villa has on that section of line is believed to be relatively insignificant, so that the figures given to show losses do not overstate the case very much.

No figures are obtainable to show the damage suffered by the National Railways' great repair shops throughout the country at the hands of the revolutionaries, but it is believed that they will mount well up into the millions. The running of military trains by the Federal and different revolutionary authorities, which have not been paid for, also will represent a considerable figure which hardly will be agreed upon except after much wrangling and litigation, and one of the greatest liabilities of all is the interest due to the bondholders of the company, which must be guaranteed by the Mexican government, according to contracts drawn up in normal times between the company and the Federal administration.

The amount of this interest had reached several million dollars American currency during the time of Gen. Huerta's presidency. It has been piling up ever since and no payment has been made upon it, although several tentative arrangements have been entered into and discarded. The Mexican administrations have always considered the payment of the bondholders of the National Railways as a sacred obligation, as, should the latter foreclose through nonpayment of their interest, the government of Mexico would lose its controlling interest of fifty-odd per cent of the shares of the company and foreigners would be in absolute control of the greatest enterprise of the country in economic as well as political and military importance.

The liability of the Mexican government through the constitutionalists' use of the Tehuantepec National Railway, a British concern, whose line crosses the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, uniting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and doing a freight business which competes with the Panama Canal, likewise will be enormous.

Carranza has had this line in his possession about a year. Recently when the last great landslide obstructed the Panama Canal the Hawaiian-American and other important steamship companies doing business between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States tried to make a contract with Carranza to take their freight across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec over the line of the Tehuantepec National.

DEMANDS OF CARRANZA.

It was expected that the obstruction to the Panama Canal would be cleared within two months, but Carranza refused to deal with the steamship companies unless they would sign a contract and oblige themselves to pay him for handling all their freight across the isthmus for the space of two years, making it appear that he intended to hold the line of the British company that long, or would fail to comply with the contract with the steamer people if the line should be delivered to the owners before the two years expired. The steamship companies did not accept the imposition of a two-year contract under these conditions.

The Mexican Railway, another British concern, whose line does by far the greatest passenger and freight business between the City of Mexico, Vera Cruz, and Puebla, has been a heavy sufferer through the revolution. The properties of this company were taken over by Carranza on December 1, 1914, and have been run uninterruptedly by the constitutionalists since that date.

The company has an account against the Mexican Government for $87,500 American currency for the running of military trains prior to the taking over of the road. The earnings of the Mexican Railway for the last normal year (1912) prior to its taking over by Carranza, which, according to the Mexican law quoted, will be used, together with four other years' earnings, for striking an average and thus computing a basis for the indemnity claim, were $4,357,509 American currency for gross earnings and $2,346,802 American currency for net earnings. The company has no figures as to the destruction of its properties, wear and tear, and the like, and these are unobtainable at the present time.

It is known that the claim to be presented on this account will be enormous. A great part of the machinery and other material of the Mexican Railways' shops at Apizaco and other points along the line between Mexico and Vera Cruz has been removed from there and transferred to the shops of the Vera Cruz al Istmo Railway (belonging to the National Railways) or to the Pan American Railway, likewise belonging to the National Railways. The shop material of these different lines has been so mixed up by the constitutionalist authorities that it will be a very difficult matter to get it straightened out, identified, and returned where it belongs. Much of it has been destroyed or used for other than railway purposes.

TRAVEL A HARDSHIP ON MEXICAN LINES—STOCK IN STATE OF WRECK AND TRAINS OVERCROWDED.

Railway men of long experience who have traveled between Puebla, Mexico, and Vera Cruz along the lines of the Mexican Railway say that rolling material of the company is in a deplorable state of damage and neglect, principally because of lack of shop facilities. A daily passenger service no longer is kept up over those lines for lack of serviceable rolling material

Such trains as run for passengers are without sleeping-car facilities. The cars are battered, dirty, and without cushions, and owing to their running only once in a while they are so crowded with every description of humanity that standing room for the long journey between Mexico and the coast is at a premium.

Passengers from Vera Cruz tell of seeing the trains for Mexico crowded with people the night before the journey is commenced, people getting aboard many hours beforehand so as to be sure of some place to sit down during the journey. The travelers say they have had to pay varying sums of money to the railway employees for the privilege of going aboard the trains ahead of time. Conditions of travel are primitive and they have to suffer many discomforts during the trip because of the crowd and difficulty of holding on to their seats.

Travel between Mexico, Puebla, and Vera Cruz now is carried on exclusively by day as a precaution against the roving bands of bandits calling themselves Zapatistas, who assault and blow up the trains and kill and rob travelers. Some months ago it was a dangerous venture to make the trip aboard a passenger train between the City of Mexico and Vera Cruz, and many persons lost their lives in the journey. The constitutionalists have been clearing the region traversed by the railway line during the past few weeks and there have been no more attacks on trains, but the discomfort incident to the lack of cars and the gradual ruin of all the railway facilities is increasing from day to day and the regularity of the service is diminishing.

SERVICE IS IRREGULAR.

Traffic between the City of Mexico and the northern frontier by way of Laredo is very irregular, and intervals of many days pass without a train's making the trip. As on the lines of the Mexican Railway, travel is carried on exclusively by day as a precaution against assaults and holdups.

Travelers are likely to have to stop over at any wayside point a number of days on account of interruptions from various causes while they are making the journey, and generally go provided with blankets and provisions to sustain them on the way. There is little available rolling stock for passenger purposes, and travelers usually have to sit several in a seat made for two or stand up throughout the trip.

Persons in the employ of the railway service say that there is at present only one Pullman car in the Republic of Mexico, and that is being used as a private touring car by some Villista general in the north. The Mexican Railway had its own service of sleepers, not Pullmans, and these, which are not numerous, are being used by the constitutionalists all over the Republic, most being used by generals and other military leaders in the field.

So many cars are being used for freight transportation and military purposes that freight service is reduced to a minimum, and all the large towns are suffering for lack of the trains of provisions that came in daily from all parts of the country in normal times. When as many as 15 carloads of provisions come into the City of Mexico in a single day the fact is heralded officially as a sign of returning prosperity. The authorities usually give as their reason for the interruption of traffic the "jam of loaded freight cars along the line, which must be cleared up so that passenger and other trains can be moved." Any other reason for the interruption would sound more plausible to the public.

Engineer Alberto J. Pani, chief of the constitutionalist railway administration, which includes the National Railways, the Mexican Railway, and other properties which have been taken over, recently gave out to the press a report regarding conditions as to the lines under his charge which was couched in very frank terms for a statement from a high revolutionary official.

ADMITS HIS DIFFICULTIES.

He admitted the difficulties he was under in putting passenger and freight traffic on anything like a practical basis, and attributed these principally to lack of rolling stock through damage and destruction, and the control of so many cars and locomotives by military leaders, who were using them not only for troop transportation but for their own individual purposes, carrying on their own freight and express business and the like, and accumulating fortunes without answering to the railway administration for anything.

This appropriation of cars and locomotives is not peculiar to the constitutionalists, but has been one of the characteristic means of graft of the Villista, Zapatista, and all other military leaders, some of whom, while not actually controlling cars and engines, charge tribute for the transportation of merchandise through the territory they control.

It is nearly always necessary to pay considerable sums to military leaders in order to get freight up to the City of Mexico from Vera Cruz and from the north, apart from the freight charges of the railway administration, which have been doubled recently. Six or eight thousand pesos of tribute money to the military officials for the moving of a single car to Mexico from the coast is considered part of the game by merchants of the capital, who compensate their difficulties and expenditures and the depreciation of the paper money by raising their prices to the public.

Engineer Pani has made sincere efforts to stop the abuses of the military leaders in connection with the railways, cut down the number of cars and engines in the hands of the leaders in the field, and increase the number in use for the service of the public and the profit of the administration under his charge, but he has before him a task which is almost hopeless, and he has obtained no result as yet worth mentioning.

GENERAL STRIKE ON NATIONAL LINES NEAR—TRAMWAY COMPANY, TOO, HAVING ITS TROUBLES.

It is predicted that as soon as the properties of the National Railways are returned to the company the latter will have on its hands a general strike of all its employees for higher wages, shorter hours, recognition of the union, and special privileges which will contribute still more to cripple it in the face of its other difficulties. The employees of the constitutionalist administration of the National Railways, who are the same men employed by the company in normal times, declared themselves on a strike the other day, and on that account the service of the trains between Mexico and the northern frontier suffered still another cause for interruption. The authorities, who openly aid and encourage strikes against private concerns, soon put a stop to this one against themselves.

A decree was published in the official press stating that as the railways had been taken over for military purposes, all their employees were considered as subject to military rule and would be punished as mutinied soldiers and military officers if they refused to work and carry out their duty; that any hindrance to the movement of trains and the free working of the railways would be considered as sedition; and that the administration would under no circumstances tolerate any obstruction on the part of the labor unions or recognize the rights of the latter to foment strikes against it through the employees of companies whose properties it had taken over for operation.

The Mexico Light & Power Co. and the Mexico Tramway Co., allied British concerns, which from the standpoint of capitalization are among the most important in the Republic and employ many thousands of workmen, have been heavy sufferers through destruction, ruin, and taking over of their properties by the revolutionary administrations and strikes on the part of their employees fomented by the latter, principally the constitutionalists. An idea of the attitude of the revolutionaries toward foreign capital in general may be obtained by a glance at the misfortunes of this great combined enterprise since the trouble reached southern Mexico.

PROPERTIES TAKEN OVER.

The properties of the Mexico Tramway Co. were taken over by the constitutionalists on October 15, 1914, following a general strike of all its employees for higher wages, shorter hours, privileges, and recognition of their union as empowered to dictate whether the company has the right to discharge employees, fill vacancies, and the like. As the company had already been losing money, fares for points within the city limits of Mexico being 6 centavos, or less than 1 cent American money, the company refused to accede to the demands of the strikers, who were encouraged by Gen. Heriberto Jara, constitutionalist governor of the federal district, and the properties were taken over for operation by the authorities, who promised the employees to satisfy their demands.

Under the constitutionalist administration the employees of the tramway company of Mexico have received two raises in pay. The first, which was granted them in January last, was for 50 per cent on all wages of 3 pesos and less a day, 40 per cent on wages of from 3 to 6 pesos, 35 per cent on wages of from 6 to 7 pesos, and 25 per cent on wages of from 7 to 9 pesos.

Wages were raised again the same proportion last August. The tramway employees recently threatened to go on another strike for higher wages, but their committee sent to treat with the authorities about the matter was jailed and they were made to understand that their conduct was unpatriotic in hampering the administration at the present time with their demands.

Tramway company officials are expecting that this third strike will be declared by their employees as soon as the administration returns them their properties, as there then will be no patriotic considerations to curb the attitude of the men. The tramway management is expecting to have a hard time dealing with the labor problem as presented by its many hundreds of employees.

When Gen. Alvaro Obregon abandoned the City of Mexico to the Conventionists on November 23 a year ago he took with him a large part of the controllers of the tramcars as well as other apparatus which would hinder the running of the cars by the Conventionists and left the latter very short of material as well as the company short of property.

ROLLING STOCK STOLEN.

When the conventionists evacuated the capital last January 27 they in their turn took away with them much rolling stock of the tramway company as well as other material in order to hamper the Constitutionalists, who were returning, and this proceeding has been repeated several times, but never on so large a scale as when Obregon first took away the controllers. The controllers were brought back by the Constitutionalists from Vera Cruz in response to American representations, but many were lost or destroyed, and the rolling material of the tramways has been dwindling steadily ever since through wear, destruction, and neglect.

At present the number of cars in use throughout the Federal District is so insufficient that they are nearly always crowded to the guards, and accidents are frequent from men and boys being brushed off as they cling to the steps and projections on the outside of the cars. Recently, in order to compensate somewhat for this deficiency in the number of tramcars, the constitutionalist management put into use the funeral or hearse cars, with all their grewsome black and white paint and paraphernalia, for passenger purposes, and on some of the lines it is a not uncommon sight to see box cars or platform cars being used for passengers. The crowding of the street cars has been a very potent cause in the spread of the epidemic of typhus fever which rages in Mexico at the present time.

In addition to strikes and salary raises to its employees the Mexico Light & Power Co., which has not been taken over by the revolutionary authorities, has suffered in other ways at the hands of the latter. The municipal lighting for Mexico City and the outlying towns of the Federal district has been unpaid for since July, 1913, when Huerta was in power, except for 200,000 pesos, which the Light & Power Co. received from the City Council of Mexico three days before the Zapatistas left the capital the last time, the payment being made in conventionist notes, which afterwards were confiscated by the constitutionalists and supposedly destroyed by them as counterfeits.

POWER BILLS UNPAID.

The power used for the municipal water pumps of Mexico likewise has been unpaid for since 1913. The light and power officials say that they could stop furnishing power to the city on the ground of lack of fulfillment of the city's part of its contract, but they have not thought of doing so. If this were done the Light & Power Co.'s properties probably would be taken over by the revolutionaries and run by themselves with still greater destruction and loss to the company. The revolutionaries in Mexico are in the habit of lighting up such houses and buildings as they choose with current of the Light & Power Co., fixing their own connections to the street wires and not advising the company, whose transformers are burned out all over the town as a result.

On Saturday, November 20, the anniversary of the five years of revolution in the country, the police officials of the constitutionalists searched the offices of the Mexico Light & Power Co. presumably for arms and ammunition, which they said were concealed there. None was found, but the officials took from the safe of the company the sum of 530,000 pesos, most of which was in conventionist notes, but part of which was in notes acknowledged to be legal tender by the constitutionalists, who issued them.

Officials of the company were able to explain the taking of the conventionist notes, as many commercial houses of Mexico City had just been searched by the authorities and those notes confiscated as counterfeits. They were not able to explain the taking away of the constitutionalist notes also.

The gigantic hydraulic power plant of the light and power company in Nexaca, State of Puebla, as well as its great power cables which furnish electricity to the Federal district as well as to the mines of the Pachuca and El Oro mining districts, also have suffered material damage at the hands of the different revolutionaries. The cables have been cut and their sustaining towers blown up at different points, and on last September 30 the constitutionalists, under Gen. Alejo Gonzalez, sacked the company's offices, buildings, and stables at Nexaca, taking away everything portable that was of value.

WORKERS WITHOUT FOOD.

The company's employees were left so without food that they were living on the charity of the constitutionalist soldiers for several days. At the end of that time the constitutionalists auctioned off in the near-by town of Huauchinango a great part of the property they had taken away and its owners were able to buy it back with money they had received from the company in the meantime.

Horses of the company taken from Necaxa have not been returned, and when last heard from were being used by the constitutionalists in the military operations around Toluca.

The number of other railway and industrial enterprises which have been taken over by the different revolutionary factions is great and almost all without exception have had their operations temporarily or permanently suspended or been levied upon heavily by the different factions.

Among the lesser railways there may be mentioned the San Rafael & Atlixco Railway, south of Mexico City, a French property which has been in the hands of the Zapatistas for many months, and the railway from Pachuca to Zimpan, State of Hidalgo, a British property.

This latter was taken over by the constitutionalists, and its lines and rolling stock suffered damage to the amount of $250,000, as estimated by its owners. Carranza offered to return them the line and what was left of the rolling stock not long ago, but they refused to accept them without the payment of indemnity for their losses.

Carranza's reply was to threaten definite confiscation of the properties, and the owners told him to confiscate, then, in which case they would take up the case diplomatically. The constitutionalists are still operating the road.

TEXTILE FACTORIES COMPELLED TO CLOSE—CROPS AND STORES OF GRAIN SEIZED BY FACTIONS.

Many textile factories, which constitute one of the richest industries of southern Mexico, are in the hands of various revolutionary factions or are shut down for lack of raw material, strikes, or damages. The great sugar properties are occupied by the Zapatistas, in whose zone they lie, and a part of the mines of the States of Guerrero and Mexico still are being worked by revolutionaries, although the important foreign properties of El Oro, in the latter State, recently have been recovered by the constitutionalists from the Zapatistas and returned to their owners, who are working them at present.

Crops and stores of grain and provisions in general have been confiscated all over southern Mexico by the revolutionaries of all factions or bought by them from their owners at rates fixed by themselves and taken to the large towns for sale at great profits. In the few cases where the owners of stores of provisions have been able to market their own products they generally have had to pay high tributes to the revolutionaries for the privilege of so doing.

The general excuse of the latter for their confiscations and forced sales at their own prices has been that the owners of the provision stores were speculators waiting for a raise in price and trafficking with the hunger of the people.

GOVERNMENT ACTIVE AGAINST STATE BANKS—FORCES THEM TO INCREASE THEIR METALLIC RESOURCES.

Recently the Constitutionalists have been very active in their campaign against the State banks of issue all over the Republic. According to the original concessions of these banks they were empowered to issue notes for the amount of twice their special deposits in coin and bars of precious metal to guarantee their bills, these special metallic guaranties being kept intact and apart from the other funds of the banks.

Not long ago Gen. Carranza issued a decree declaring that a special privilege conceded by Huerta while in power to all the State banks to increase their issue of notes to three times the amount of their metallic deposits guaranteeing same was illegal and that the banks must within a very short period assigned them for the purpose increase their guaranties in precious metal to half the amount of their outstanding notes or reduce the latter to twice the amount of the guaranty deposit on hand.

This was a hard blow to the banks of the different States, the majority of which are capitalized by foreigners and are considered as perfectly solvent intsitutions, but are in a difficult position to raise funds all at once, owing to the general poverty of the country and the sacrifices one must make to realize on what in normal times would be quick assets.

A commission, headed by the subsecretary of finance, was formed to investigate the condition of the State banks and declare their concessions forfeited if they did not fulfil the conditions of Gen. Carranza's decree within the term specified, which already has expired. The committee, which still is continuing its investigation, is taking into consideration other matters than the guaranty deposits for the outstanding bills, according to official statements.

ABLE TO PAY OBLIGATIONS.

The first bank whose concession was declared forfeited by the commission was the Banco Peninsular de Yucatan, of Merida, a French concern, which in general business circles is considered as in very good condition and perfectly able to fulfil all its obligations if given reasonable time.

This belief has been attested all along by the premium put upon the notes of the Merida bank, as well as those of the other State institutions, over those of the revolutionary factions, the notes of that bank not having depreciated in the quotations of the local market in spite of the declaration of the forfeiture of the concession. The French management of the Banco Peninsular, immediately upon its concession being declared forfeited, began energetic diplomatic negotiations, which had the effect of disconcerting the authorities considerably. However, they went on investigating the State banks and shortly afterwards declared forfeited the concessions of the banks of Guerrero, Hidalgo, and Queretaro.

The Banco Nacional de Mexico, which was investigated also, was declared to be in excellent condition in every way, with sufficient metallic guarantees on hand to issue legally another 32,000,000 pesos worth of notes, if it so wished.

The Banco de Londres y Mexico was advertised by the authorities as being in a fairly satisfactory way, and they themselves admitted that they meant to enter into a combination with those two institutions to get them to form with their French capital the nucleus of the new Federal bank of issue planned by Carranza to be the sole institution authorized to issue notes in the Republic, admitting at the same time that they meant to eliminate the State banks or have them also enter into the combination to form the Federal bank.

The general belief of business men in Mexico now is that the pressure brought to bear upon the State banks in regard to their note guaranties is but a means to force them to enter into the Federal-bank combination, the idea being for the administration to utilize their foreign capital to form the Federal bank and later supplant it, becoming the sole owner of the institution. Thus the unification of the paper money now in circulation could be secured, and the administration could reap considerable profits from being the sole issuer of notes in the Republic.

FOREIGN CAPITAL HOSTILE.

The attitude of the foreign capital invested in the State banks is openly hostile to the administration, however, on account of the coercive measures the latter has adopted to make them enter into its financial combination, and several of their principal capitalizers who have been interviewed in the City of Mexico say that they will fight out the matter through all diplomatic and legal channels before they will forego the rights conceded them by their concessions.

Owners of the Bank of Hidalgo, Britishers, it is understood, will lead the fight for the State banks, which are holding very well together. The Hidalgo Bank's notes are quoted on a par with those of the Banco Nacional at the present time, not having been affected by the declaration of forfeiture of its concession. That is to say, they are worth three to one, as compared with the circulating notes of the Constitutionalist administration.

The bank recently advertised to exchange Banco Nacional notes for its own notes on a par for anyone desiring to make such an exchange. It handles the rich British and American mining interests of the Pachuca region and is considered to be in excellent condition, in spite of the declaration of the authorities to the contrary.

The following is a list of the important State banks which are controlled by foreign capital and which are holding out against the efforts of the Constitutionalist authorities to make them enter into its combination, which they consider will be to sacrifice not only their amour propre but their financial interests as well:

Banco Peninsular de Yucatan (French), Banco de Hidalgo (British), Banco de Guanajuato (French), Banco de Queretaro (French), Banco de Guerrero (British), Banco de San Luis Potosi (British), Banco Oriental de Puebla (Spanish), Banco del Estado de Mexico, Banco de Tabasco, and Banco Mercantil de Vera Cruz (all three dependent upon the Banco Nacional and composed of about 87 per cent French capital).

The following State banks are not foreign controlled, but likewise are enlisted in the struggle for existence:

Banca de Jalisco (of which Germans are heavy shareholders), Banco de Sonora and Banco de Coahuila (of which two banks Americans are heavy shareholders), Banco Minero de Chihuahua (Creel and Terrazas interests), and Banco de Morelos, Banco de Tamaulipas, Banco de Durango, and Banco Mercantil de Monterey (these last named four being made up mostly of Mexican capital).

MARKET IS UPSET BY MANY DECREES—INSTABILITY OF CIRCULATING MEDIUM ADDS TO CHAOS.

The attitude of foreign and domestic capital generally is hostile to the constitutionalist administration, as it is toward the revolutionaries generally, because of their arbitrary acts, the tribute they exact at every turn, the chaos caused in the financial market by their sweeping decrees, which are amended and revoked overnight as it suits their convenience; the instability of the circulating medium caused by the refusal of each faction to recognize the tender of the rest and fluctuation in their own paper money by declaring a large part of it to be counterfeit every few days; the imposition of taxes and wholesale confiscations, of which foreigners as well as natives are the victims, and the fomenting of strikes. It is safe to say that there is not a foreign capitalist or property owner of any importance and very few Mexicans of financial weight who consider themselves safe under the constitutionalists or any other revolutionaries, or who have not already suffered considerably at their hands during the recent long years of disorder and anarchy.

The subsecretary of finance declared recently to the reporters of the Mexico City press that the administration was planning another increase in the export duty on precious metals and another great increase in the taxes on mining properties. He did not state the amount of the latter, but well-informed persons declare that the present mining taxes of the country are to be increased to thirty-seven times their present amount, which will make them practically prohibitive.

Gen. Carranza's recent decree ordering the acquirement by the administration of all the vast cotton crop of the Laguna region of Coahuila and Durango at cheap prices, "to be sold at cost to the manufacturers of the Republic," is looked upon in the City of Mexico with suspicion as another graft of the administration, and the export tax on hides, which consists of 5 centavos the kilo, is considered in a very unpopular light.

The order for the payment of customs taxes and certain other taxes in gold, which has been in force for a long time under Gen. Carranza, is considered as deterrent to business in these impoverished times.

All this is not to deny that even the enemies of Gen. Carranza acknowledge his necessity of funds if he is to establish peace throughout the country, and would like to see him succeed in this enterprise, but the general belief is that only a small part of the money exacted by the administration is invested for the public good; that grafting and corruption are universal among the revolutionaries; that the public returns are diverted to private channels everywhere; and that instead of the increase in tributes, confiscations, and taxation resulting in the establishment of peace, there will be divisions among the constitutionalists ultimately over the dividing of the spoils, and the warfare and suffering will continue.

BEST PEOPLE DODGE POLITICAL QUESTIONS—WANT PEACE AND PROTECTION FROM ONE PARTY OR ANOTHER.

The people of the City of Mexico and the better classes of the rest of the large towns of the south of the Republic, where the bulk of the population resides and where the education and wealth of the country are most represented, are conservative in their political leaning, together with the foreign element.

They want peace and protection at any cost to be able to devote themselves to their livelihood, and it matters little to them who is in power, so long as an end is put to the warfare and pillage which are rampant and they are safe from persecution. These people were all favorably disposed toward Gen. Carranza when he and his forces first came down from the north. His harshness, his vindictiveness, his radicalism, and the abuses of his followers, brought to a climax by the reign of terror of Gen. Alvaro Obregon in the capital, won from the constitutionalists the sympathy and trust of the majority.

Later excesses of the Zapatistas, characterized rather by ignorance and savagery than by ingenious grafting methods and the dismal failure of Villa in the north, put the conventionist element without the bounds of possibility as hopes for the establishment of better things under their rule.

The régime of Gen. Pablo Gonzales in Mexico City, while suffering from the defects which have characterized all the revolutionary administrations in the capital, exactions, persecutions, and the like, has been so much better than that of Obregon, the Villistas, or the Zapatistas, and the food situation, while still afflicting, has improved so in the capital that Mexico City's public is again rather feeling less unkindly toward the constitutionalists in general. The absolute stoppage of political vindictiveness and unnecessary persecutions on that score to get possession of the victims' positions and properties and the establishment of a stable legal tender would go far toward making the constitutionalists strong in the least impoverished and most enlightened portion of the Republic.

CITY A SAD SIGHT.

The City of Mexico presents at present a sad and depressed appearance in general, despite the arches of triumph which are being constructed all along Avenida Juarez and Avenida Francisco I. Madero (formerly San Francisco), its principal thoroughfares, and the myriads of incandescent bulbs which are being strung over the façades of the public buildings in preparation for the arrival of the First Chief, who is expected at the close of next February, when there will be official festivities on such a scale as have never been seen in the Republic.

Hundreds of beggars, ragged and half starved women and boys, dodge and scurry or drag themselves along under the scaffoldings that are going up and fairly assault passers-by on all the street corners, whining and pleading for a pasteboard slip with which to "buy bread." Many stores and offices are closed, where formerly flourishing business was carried on.

Street cars pass at irregular intervals, crowded until there is no standing room left, even on the steps; the coaches are drawn by half-starved "sardines," as the cab horses are called in Mexican slang, and go at a funeral pace; automobiles full of constitutionalist officers whiz down the principal streets, swing wildly round the corners, and bowl over all obstacles that stand in their way or cross their path. Most of these autos have been confiscated from their owners.

At least 80 per cent of them now are in the hands of Government officials and military men. Most of the rest are owned by foreigners who have them confiscated every little while and get them back with difficulty.

FOOD STILL HIGH.

While food conditions have improved in the capital since the establishment of Gen. Gonzales there, and certain articles, such as meat, corn, frijoles, sugar, and rice, have cheapened considerably, conditions of living still are very difficult and prices in general are going up. Especially is this true of clothing, medicines, and practically everything apart from fuel and the most rudimentary articles of food mentioned.

Merchants are afraid to reduce their prices because of the difficulties attending renewal of their stocks under present traffic conditions and because of the risk attending possession of the money in circulation under the revolutionaries.

On account of official declarations regarding the prevalence of counterfeits, with specifications of the false notes, which may be contradicted officially a day or so later or may not be contradicted, such a distrust exists regarding the bills that all merchants endeavor not to be left with any great quantity on hand overnight.

It is always hard to sell bills for gold on Saturday because of the uncertainty as to what official declarations may be made the Monday following, Sunday being a day when the market is closed and no transactions can be made.

Speculation in exchange has become one of the most lucrative employments, or at least one of the most general throughout the Republic of Mexico. Offices, licensed by the authorities, are set up everywhere and fortunes are made or lost in a single day.

Not very long ago through an official declaration in the official organ, El Pueblo, declaring that a great proportion of the Constitutionalist bills in circulation were counterfeits and would be taken up and destroyed by the authorities, the price of the bills in American currency dropped from 12 to 17 to 1 in 24 hours.

Two days later the officials had reconsidered their statement and declared that the amount of the counterfeits had been found to be unimportant, another declaration coming out to this effect in the official organ with specifications as to the few that were not good and how to distinguish them. The price of exchange went back again to 13 to 1 in a few days. Those who had sold gold for Constitutionalist bills when the panic began and bought it later when the bills rose made fortunes. There are malcontents in Mexico who say that the authorities were the principal gainers through the panic which was originated and ended by the official organ.

MANY STRIKES IN CAPITAL.

There have been numberless interruptions in the monotony of things in the City of Mexico owing to strikes in the different branches of industry. One of these which made itself particularly felt recently was that of the Mexican employees of the baking establishments. The Spanish have an absolute monopoly of that industry. The authorities, as usual, when they are not the employers, sided with the strikers, and particularly so in this instance, as the Spanish, because of their hard-workingness and industrial competition, and the racial antipathy felt for them by the Indian, who predominates among the revolutionaries, are hated more than any other foreigner, the Americans occupying second place in unpopularity.

The Spanish bakers having refused to comply with the demands of the strikers for a raise which would have left them without any earnings, the authorities aided the strikers to establish for themselves and put their former employers out of business. A good many Spaniards have sold their baking establishments on this account, being unable to compete with the joint forces of the strikers and the authorities, and the latter are buying up the baking establishments, as they are sold for a song.

Some of the Spanish bakers still keep up the competition but are losing money. The price of bread remains unchanged and is still very high on account of the shortage of flour.

The Spaniards have a monopoly of the saloon and grocery business in Mexico and had a monopoly of the pawnbroking trade. The latter was abolished by the revolutionaries, who made them return all small pledges without interest and so trammeled them in regard to their interest rates and so burdened them with taxes and restrictions that they all, without exception, went out of business and devoted themselves to other livelihoods, principally bazars for buying and selling second-hand articles. The only pawnshops now existing in Mexico are those of the administration called "Montes de Piedad," which charge cheap rates of interest but have no taxes to pay.

HARD BLOW TO SALOONS.

The Spanish saloons recently received a hard blow in a decree which was published by the governor of the federal district ordering all saloons to move off Avenida Francisco I. Madero and away from the vicinity of the churches, none being allowed within a hundred meters distance of any church.

As there is a church for almost every block in the center of Mexico City, and the Spanish saloon keepers mostly have their locations on long leases, the decree ordering the majority of them to seek others threatened to put them out of business. All had been losing money heavily for over two years on account of the different revolutionary authorities closing their establishments for long intervals as measures of public order to lessen drunkenness, and exacting tributes of them when allowed to reopen.

The saloons have not yet moved from their locations, although the time fixed for that has expired; but they have paid heavily to the authorities, and the matter of their being forced to move still is pending. The hours for saloons being allowed to remain open during the day are regulated according to the amount paid by each. Some stay open until the small hours of the morning and others are closed all or nearly all day long.

The houses where the exchange business is carried on, a great proportion of which are in the hands of Spaniards, have been levied on heavily for taxes. A few days ago the proprietors of the saloons, bazaars, and exchange offices, as well as many other commercial establishments, were called to appear before the chiefs of their respective police precincts and "invited" to contribute for the erection of the arches of triumph which are going up preparatory to the festivities attending Gen. Carranza's arrival in the capital of the Republic.

All who were called upon contributed considerable sums. The fear of being considered as "seditious" acted as a stimulus to their generosity.

The offices and pressrooms of the Mexican Herald still remain closed by order of the Mexico City police authorities. Paul Hudson, the principal owner of the paper, and others interested in it have received no explanation for the closing, nor have they been cited to appear before the authorities.

CENSORS TO GET OUT PAPER.

The paper has been closed for over a month, and during that time the official constitutionalist organs have constituted the sole press in the capital. Some Americans employed as censors and press agents by the constitutionalists are preparing to publish a paper in English to take the place of the Herald, which will be financed by the administration. This paper already is soliciting advertisements and will be published in a few days.

One of the aspects of the policy of the constitutionalists in the south of the Republic which has been most commented upon since American recognition became known as a fact is the general vindictiveness displayed in punishing political opponents. The execution of Garcia Granados and of Gen. Navarro recently, when the former had been sentenced lightly and the latter acquitted by the court-martial which judged them, the sentence being overridden by the higher authorities, produced a sad effect upon those looking to the constitutionalists to cement peace, stop useless persecutions, and bring all peacefully inclined men together for the upbuilding of the country.

Antonio Rivera, former secretary to the federal district government under Huerta, who, in spite of a written safe conduct he carried from Gen. Carranza, was arrested and imprisoned when acting as a witness in favor of Garcia Granados, shortly will be tried before a court-martial, and fears are expressed that it will go hard with him.

He has many friends in Mexico City, and apart from having been unfriendly to Madero, having accepted a post under the Huerta administration, and written criticisms of the Madero administration for the press of the capital, not even his most bitter political enemies have any accusation to make against him.

Political arrests and persecutions continue not only in the City of Mexico but all over the Republic. The number of exiles and fugitives from the authorities is legion, and confiscations and arrests are the rule of the day. The amnesty decrees of the different constitutionalist authorities have only been observed in such cases as suit their convenience. So many have been arrested and imprisoned or executed after they had surrendered in response to the decrees offering amnesty to political enemies of the administration that fugitives remain in hiding or under arms in the outlying districts, and the labor of peace and reconstruction is greatly retarded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I listened, as nearly everybody always does, with a great deal of interest to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I was happy enough to hear a part of what was said by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I do not want to discuss the entire question right now, but I do want to discuss the salient, central point involved in the controversy.

In my opinion, that salient, central point is the right of any community to govern itself, and the duty of every other community to abstain from attempting to control a given community's domestic affairs. Now, the right of self-government carries with it, ex necessitate rei, the right of self-misgovernment. If a people are to be allowed to govern themselves just so long as in somebody else's opinion they govern themselves right, and then are not to be allowed to govern themselves when other people think they pass the bounds of right government, then the people of that community are neither free nor independent—they are held in suzerainty to the criticizing community. A people can not have self-government without having self-misgovernment until or unless men become angels.

The degree of self-misgovernment is one thing; the fact of self-misgovernment is another. Now, it is true that some people, in attempting to govern themselves, misgovern themselves to a horrible extent, and that other people, in attempting to govern themselves, misgovern themselves to a moderate extent; but there is no line of demarcation to be drawn. If a country is to be allowed by other countries to misgovern itself moderately then it has theoretically, abstractly, academically, practically, and internationally the right to misgovern itself to a very much larger extent because you can not draw the line of demarcation in degree.

This is no new question, Mr. President—not in American politics, at any rate. It just so happens that at one time George Washington was President of the United States, and tried to run a Government upon neutral political lines, nonpartisan lines, and because he did he was afterwards claimed by the Federalist Party as being one of their great saints. If he ever became so, it was after he left office. It just so happens that at the same time Thomas Jefferson was his Secretary of State, and furnished him with his policy, as far as the State Department was concerned, upon most matters—not, perhaps, every single one. It just so happens that before the close of the eighteenth century a revolution broke out in France. No people anywhere ever started a revolution with higher ideals or loftier purposes. Few people anywhere ever sank to lower levels before they got through with it. They started a movement for the abolition of special privilege—of noblesse, clergy, everybody—and in behalf of a recognition of what they called the "rights of man," and they synchronized that with the right of "liberty, equality, and fraternity." They got into a European war, and after a while, there being elected to the convention to govern France a lot of people who never had had any experience at governing anything, France fell under the control of the convention into the worst disorders of every description—a resurgence toward barbarism upon the part of a people, very nearly a whole people—the Jacquerie in the country and the mob in Paris, a people theretofore highly civilized, and Danton and Robespierre and Marat and all the balance of the men whose names have been synonyms of fanatical cruelty became the French Government, if that might be called government which recognized no bounds to its hates, its cruelties, its theories, or other physical or mental or social or antisocial activities.

The "people" went ahead headlong in a mad career, and, instead of merely imprisoning a poor, idle, indolent, foolish king, they cut off his head; and instead of imprisoning or, if necessary, banishing an idle, vainglorious, and fashionable woman of little sense but of a good heart and great, good breeding, they cut off her head, and brutalized her child and finally murdered him.

There has been no page in history hitherto written darker than the page of the French Revolution at one time of its chronicle. There has been no movement in history that started with as high aspirations and as lofty purposes, and which left to the world as great a legacy of substantial good, as the French Revolution.

What took place elsewhere and among other peoples? Why, the King of Prussia and the Emperor of Austria—because he was even then called Kaiser or Cæsar, implying world dominion—concluded that because just upon the southern boundary of one and just upon the western boundary of the other—in their back yard, so to speak—anarchy existed and apparent chaos existed, that therefore a right of intervention existed. The American people, as represented by George Washington, President, and as represented by Thomas Jefferson, Secretary of State, never admitted that that claim of right of intervention because of gross self-misgovernment of a neighbor was good. They took the position, upon the contrary, that France had a right to settle her domestic affairs; and although they did not word it as I did a moment ago, it substantially amounted to the same thing—that with the right of self-government upon the part of the people of France went the right of self-misgovernment so far as any other nation was concerned; of course, not as far as God was concerned, nor as far as France herself—the local sovereign—was concerned.

There is nothing new about this. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] rises here and tells us that the military governor of some State down in Mexico utters a pronunciamento to the effect that "God wanes while revolution gains"—a diatribe against religion. There are Members of this Senate, or may be, who have forgotten—there are none who upon refreshing their memories will not recall, and the Senator from Massachusetts, with his scholarship, does not need to recall—the fact that there was a period during the French Revolution when God was declared to be nonexistent, and when a common prostitute was crowned as "goddess of reason." There seemed to be a revolt then and there against all forms of superiority—birth, wealth, education, morality, and finally God Himself. Did we "intervene"? Did we indorse European intervention even "in behalf of God and morality"? No; we distinctly disapproved and laid down a doctrine to the contrary for our own guidance as to all peoples and some years later as a warning to Europe with regard to American concerns.

Mr. President, whenever any people anywhere begin to inquire into fundamentals—whenever people begin to question what has traditionally been held to be fundamental in human, political, or social conduct—those people are apt to go to extremes; and if you flatter yourselves that they do it because they are French or because they are Mexicans or because they are something else, you flatter yourself with little cause. You, yourself, under the same circumstances would probably or might possibly do the same thing.

Your so-called civilization is about skin deep. There is a veneering that human progress has put upon animal man, not a very deep veneering and not a very tough one. The most highly cultured people intellectually upon the surface of this globe today have not very remotely illustrated that fact upon the plains of Belgium; they have been illustrating it upon the high seas; and one of their chief opponents upon the high seas illustrated it to the last extreme in the case of the Barralong. You are no better than they. Intellectually you are no wiser, morally you are no better, physically you are no stronger, and historically you have no more or greater honors behind you.

What if some military governor somewhere in Mexico did say that religion was a farce and God was a myth; he is not the first fool who has "said in his own heart there is no God." But the United States took the position that matters of that sort were matters for the consideration of the country—that self-government carried with it the right of self-misgovernment; that the fact that there was anarchy and wrong domestic conditions within a given country gave no right to another country to go there and assert itself as a master. I am free and independent, but the moment the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] can say to me that "because you hold certain ideas and do certain things I assert my mastership," that moment I cease to be free and independent and become servant and slave and, if I submit, craven as well.

Now, if you do want to take hold of Mexico and straighten Mexico out, civilize it and unbarbarize it, if I may make such a word; that is one thing. If you are going to do it, then you must do it virtually by annexation. You can not do it by spasmodic international interference. If you were to undertake it even by annexation you would fail, because there is not an instance in all the history of the world where a superposed civilization lasted. It is a mere veneering; it does not go to the substance. It is not grounded in the life, it is not grounded in the thought; it is not grounded in the feeling nor the ideals nor aspirations of the people upon whom you attempt to superpose it. You can not make a white man of a Chinaman nor a Chinaman of a negro by law, and you can not make a self-governing people out of Mexicans by any amount of international interference.

What then? It is sad; barbarous; it is true; but what of it? They are to be left, as every other nation is left, and as every individual to a certain extent is left, to "work out their salvation in fear and trembling before God." There is but one way of working it out, and that is gradually going through the travail of the childbirth of liberty and self-government; and while they are going through that sort of process they are gradually destroying that which is most antagonistic to liberty and self-government, and they are gradually establishing the power and influences which are most favorable to liberty and self-government.

The idea of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], of all men, standing upon this floor and quoting the utterance of a military governor of a Mexican Province who has not only defied law and morals, but the Supreme Deity itself, and presenting that to the American Senate as something new and startling, strikes me—oh, I will not say how it strikes me—except that considering it came from the Senator from Massachusetts it strikes me, let me say unfavorably and unexpectedly.

There are some other things that are not new since this discussion has started. This Government laid down the rule in the very first administration of it under the new Union—under the present Constitution—that the citizens or subjects of a neutral country have a right to sell munitions of war to either belligerent in war, provided the other is not forbidden by law to buy the same things in the same market, both equally subject to the right of capture of the things thus bought by the other, leaving to the chances of war the power to capture. That was indorsed by George Washington after Thomas Jefferson had reduced it to writing, and it was made an utterance of the State Department, under the President's approval, to the entire world. It was not founded, as men who are in their thoughts treasonable to the United States Government say, upon the idea that we merely wanted to make money out of people who are shedding one another's blood abroad. That was not the reason for it. It is not the reason for it now. The reason is broader and deeper and higher. The reason is that if you establish as a universal policy that one belligerent making war upon another can not buy munitions of war from neutral countries, then you have secured in advance the military success of that country which constantly keeps itself in peace times upon a war footing, and you have decreed in advance the defeat of the country which regards war as a mere limited thing, now and then to be expected, but not as a constant occurrence, and who prepares itself mainly for peace and only spasmodically for war—in peace keeping prepared only for defense, but always prepared for more peace and better peace and truer peace—men being men "for a' that" and brothers "under their skins."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word and I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Just a word.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield in one second. What chance, in God's name, could our own country have? Washington knew it, Jefferson knew it, and Andrew Jackson later on knew it, for he reenforced it. What chance would our country have in a naval war with Great Britain or a land war with Germany if we could not buy munitions abroad from neutral powers? We would be condemned beforehand to absolute, international slavery—subjects of international diplomatic bullying. We would be subject to be bullied by every first-class power in the world who possessed conscious strength behind their bullying, whether on sea or on land. It was therefore the policy announced by us in our own interests, but more than that the policy announced by us in the interests of humanity, a policy announced in the interests of peace-loving, war-fearing peoples as against war-loving and peace-dreading peoples. Now I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the question I was about to ask the Senator I think he has in part answered. The establishment of the doctrine that we have no right to ship munitions of war to belligerents would hamstring our own country in a case of an emergency when we had exhausted our supplies in the defense of our own country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not only that, Senator, but it would hamstring us to an extent greater than it would hamstring any other first-class power on the face of the earth, because the main object of our Government is to develop the individual, and we do not admit the German or Roman theory that the main object of the individual is to be a servant to make the Government either great or splendid or powerful or world dominating. We have no song, "America over all." Believing that, we believe that the ordinary life of the Nation is peace and that we must prepare for the continuance of peace in its ordinary life, and only when an emergency requires it is it necessary to prepare for war, and only when a great emergency requires it is it necessary to engage in war.

Now, take another country, whose children are taught in the schools, whose youth are taught in the universities, whose young men are taught in the army that the main object of the existence of an individual is that he may be a part of a great organized society which shall be splendid and powerful with world dominion, and who with all that teaching keep themselves "prepared" all the time on a war footing permanently. I am speaking of no particular power, but of any to which that may apply; any who do keep themselves prepared with stocks and stores and munitions of war, with stocks and stores of factories, encouraged by legislation to keep up the constant and yearly and weekly production of munitions of war. In heaven's name, what sort of a chance would we stand?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] went out when a boy, I believe, and got the high office of corporal. I have always heard him spoken of as "Corpl. NELSON." Suppose that with the then condition of the North, without the thousands of munition plants all over the world—in England, France, and Prussia—making the biggest guns then known and turning out all the ships then known, the United States Government could not have imported a ship or a gun or a pound of powder from anywhere else in the world, they themselves—these United States then virtually making none—and suppose the South had had plenty of all—how long do you think Corpl. NELSON would have lasted? I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator has defined what our national policy has been with reference to military preparedness and the training of American youth, and so forth. Does the Senator believe there is any necessity for changing that national policy?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no necessity for "changing the national policy," because a national policy is a permanent thing—a usual thing; the rule, not the exception—but there is a necessity, which in my mind is so plain that "he who runs may read," for present preparation against anticipated and approximate danger.

Now, one other word and then I will yield again. You frequently hear men say that "all Europe will be exhausted at the end of the war," and that no country will be aggressive and none will be seeking trouble. Do you know when a nation must seek trouble—absolutely must seek it—in self-defense? When it has an autocratic government, with millions of men under arms after a successful war, who the moment they are disbanded must go back to civil life and hunt lost employment. Under such distressing present conditions, with the capital which formerly employed them almost exhausted, there is a spirit among a successful soldiery that leads them to "follow the eagles" to the confines of the earth. Now, one word along that line. Do not talk about nations being "exhausted." Here are the little impecunious Balkan States; Bulgaria is one of them. It went through two wars which tested every fiber of its people's courage, and which tested every financial resource of which they were capable. It went through the first war and was bankrupted substantially. It went through the second war and they were a little bit more bankrupted, if anything. Now they are joining in the third war with 500,000 well-equipped men in the field. The Kaiser himself has not furnished any better soldiery, as far as mere efficiency in war goes.

What you have got to dread aggression from is a victorious country already in position, equipped, mounted, ready, with millions of men, and already successful. The great Napoleon found that there was a period in his career when he could not stop. He had either to abdicate or go further; and every autocratic Government which gets into that situation is going to find the same thing.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, we are going to find the same thing. You can disband a great army in a free country—we did it after the war; but it is a very difficult operation in a country founded upon military traditions and a military organization officered by a purely military caste and supported by military ideals. Now I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator really believe that we are going to be attacked at the close of this war by some European Government out of a pure spirit of conquest?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not, with any such avowed reason.

Mr. BORAH. Why should they attack the United States?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is always to be found a reason; there is always a pretense. The wolf found one over the lamb's protest.

Mr. BORAH. What is the reason now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is always a condition.

Mr. BORAH. What reason now assigns itself to the mind of the Senator that we must anticipate an attack from some Government in Europe?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will tell the Senator. I am not anticipating an "attack," in the first place. I am anticipating bullying first, and I am anticipating the fact that the American people will not consent to be bullied. Now I will tell the Senator why I anticipate bullying.

Mr. BORAH. Bullying would be for the purpose of attack.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not necessarily, though in effect and perhaps as a provocation to make us attack. The gentleman forgets the difference between the subjective and the objective entirely. Objectively, yes; subjectively, no. The possibility might be, and any man can find a hundred good reasons for it. One way, a great power in Europe to-day believes and the people in that country believe that we have virtually made ourselves allies of the other belligerent, because whatever was the principle of international law and whatever was the traditional policy of the Federal Government, the effect upon them has been that we exported munitions of war to both the belligerents equally on paper, but to one belligerent only in fact; because the other belligerent had no sea power and no means of transportation, we have, in their minds, virtually become the allies of their enemy. We have raised some very delicate questions with that power. They remain to be settled. We have gone far enough to demand apologies and satisfaction for the sudden unwarned high-sea assassinations of our women and children as well as our men upon unarmed merchant vessels. There will be plenty of diplomatic talk about that, and there will be plenty to quarrel about. Just in inverse proportion to the naval power that we have back of us when we talk will be the height of conversation of that country, and the depth of it, and the extremity of it—in short, the bullying of it.

Unless we are prepared either to control the sea and thereby "spread a wave of caution" in the mind of a military and naval bureaucracy and "divine right" autocracy or unless we have at least Navy enough to make them doubtful as to whether they can control the lines of oceanic transportation for troops, then will come the bullying, to which we must either submit or unavailingly and ineffectively make puerile resistance.

Now, if the American people had "sense enough to stand bullying and let it go at that," as a man said to me not long ago, it would be all right; but the American people have neither that degree of sense nor that kind of sense; and by the way I am not hungry or yearning or thirsting or praying that they may acquire it. I am a peace fanatic, but there is a point where I object to the other fellow's shedding my blood. Not long ago a man said to me "I do not want to shed the blood of any people on the surface of the earth." I replied, "I do not, either, but I do not want anybody to be shedding mine either." It is like the boy whose mother told him not to fight. The boy said, "Mamma, I think you are right, but those boys down there in Peanut Alley, what about it, if they go to fighting me?" We have already been bullied, have we not, by both sides?

So much for one side of the shield. What is the other? Another great belligerent has violated nearly every rule of international law with regard to our commerce upon the high seas. Do you suppose that we will stand a better chance or a worse one of getting satisfaction upon that subject if we are ready than if we are unready?

All these questions are in the field of diplomacy now, and the President of the United States has very wisely attempted to keep them within the field of diplomacy. I am sorry for one that Congress had to meet right now. I think the management of our diplomatic affairs would have been more wisely handled by a man long visioned and deep visioned and tender visioned than they are apt to be when they are made a game of battledore and shuttlecock on the floor of these two Houses, even when I am one who is forced by others to join in playing the game.

You ask me from whom and what we are going to expect aggression about? My answer is, We have already had it from both sides—if assassinating our women and children on unarmed merchant ships on the high seas wherever they go be not aggression, and if after having that fact brought to the attention of a great power the great power talks, and if while it is talking it perpetrates the same crime upon the crew of another ship, and if, after further talk and just before making an apology, it perpetrates the same crime upon the crew of still another ship, and then if, after it has come into our notion and agreed for the future that their action shall be limited by our demands, another ally of the same power comes in and perpetrates the same crime on still another ship, and then tells us in the high-toned dogmatism of diplomacy that we have never discussed the matter with them as an "independent sovereign power," and that they had a right to murder our women and children and men, noncombatants, on an unarmed ship, after their allies agreed not to do it, on the high diplomatic ground that we had "never discussed it with them," with the implication in the rear that after we get through with them Turkey will also have a right to sink one, two, or three ships and talk about each, and after that Bulgaria, if she has anything to do it with, might sink another, and talk about it while a second is being sunk, and its noncombatant crew and passengers assassinated.

You have here a long parley reaching each sovereign power that had no independent diplomatic notice, however much real notice they had of our objections to that sort of thing.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] the other day made it sufficiently plain that another great belligerent power has violated to the same degree, though in another field of action and touching another subject matter, this time property—not life—all our rights as a neutral people entitled in war as in peace to commercial relations with the world except where belligerent rights intervene.

Mr. President, as far as I am concerned—and I am as much interested in cotton as any gentleman upon this floor—I would give one crop of cotton, or two crops of cotton, or more and see them destroyed any day or over night rather than to demand the shedding of the blood of one American boy. Whatever damage sounds in money or in merchandise can be cured by money, and it can not only be cured by money, but a wise government may at times well procrastinate and postpone in order that the appeal for reparation and indemnity may be made to a cooler court, a cooler jury, to a people, who, after war is over and the high feeling of war has subsided, are capable of considering things impartially from the standpoint purely of the demands of justice. So far as the mere money damage is concerned to cotton or any other product of merchandise I would do as Washington did, as Adams did, as Jefferson did, and as Madison tried to do during the early period of his administration during the French revolutionary and Napoleonic wars. I would "bear and forbear" until a cooler time came. I would do as Lincoln did during the Civil War, and the result of the arbitration of the Alabama claims proved him to be right in doing it.

There is only one thing that can not be procrastinated or postponed with honor. There is an old Spanish proverb that "gentlemen never quarrel about money." That is not internationally altogether applicable, but it is a pity to see two nations ever fighting one another about money, even if they do diplomatically quarrel. But there is a point beyond which and about which you can not procrastinate, and questions growing out of which you can not postpone in honor and self-respect; concerning which you must demand that there shall be a cessation. "You may steal my purse—'tis trash"—but you can not come upon my premises or upon the premises of a neighbor where my wife and children are, have a right to be, and trespass upon their lives or their liberties or their limbs; that is a different proposition.

Now, so far as any oratorical attack has in view to weaken or hurt this Democratic administration—if there be anything of that sort in any man's motive for speaking—I, for one, decline to respond to it, because I, for one, decline to bring a great international question down into the dust and sweat and turmoil of political discussion. I will only say this, and upon reflection I can not say it better, I believe, than to repeat what I said a moment ago—repeat it, not because repetition is necessary, but simply to emphasize it—that whatever any man may think of him, there is in the White House at this time—and I do not say it because he is a Democrat; during the Spanish-American War I uttered a compliment equally extreme, though not of the same exact character, because the two men did not possess the same personal traits, of President McKinley—but there is a man in the White House now who has deep vision, long vision, and that means historic, educated vision and tender vision—by which I mean a vision which, after it sees and before it advises action, considers thoughtfully not only American humanity but humanity all over the world. That is right, and that is totally a different thing from allowing wrong to run riot in your own land, and not rebuking and fighting against unrighteousness of government at home—the last is one thing, but making yourself God's globe-trotting, earth-perambulating missionary of good government all over the globe is a totally different thing. I do not see, for the life of me, why when Mexico is working out her problems with blood and with robbery and with horror and with everything else that is reprehensible, but still approximating an issue and approximating an end to it, we should raise any voice in criticism of a policy which has borne and forborne, and which will bear and forbear still further—recognizing the eternal truth that she must "work out her own salvation in fear and trembling." If a common woman can not bear a common child without travail, how can a people give birth to law and order and liberty without it? Do you forget the "War of the Roses" in England? Do you forget the Thirty Years' War about nothing but creeds?

Mr. President, I did not intend to make this speech; I am a little sorry that I did do it; but the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], carrying with it the inference or insinuation that it was our duty to call people to order because some fellow down in Mexico had said that "God wanes while revolution gains" and had expressed a doubt of the existence of any God or any religion, aroused in my mind certain historical associations. When I first rose I intended only to mention them and to sit down; but, as usual, my slow-working intellect is stirred up by some quicker intellect asking me questions of some kind, and before I know it I have made an extended speech.

During the delivery of Mr. WILLIAMS's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the resolution goes to the calendar, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to agree to lay the unfinished business aside temporarily until the pending resolution can be disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That course will be satisfactory, Mr. President, if the bill holds its place as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. WILLIAMS's speech,

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I had intended to make some observations after listening to the address of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and that of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]; but since this discussion has already been prolonged to a point where I am sure my friend from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who is anxious to press the unfinished business, begins to feel impatient, and as there seems to be really no necessity for further discussion, I shall merely say a word and then ask for action on the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am interested in this resolution somewhat, but I could not hear the statement of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I said that I was about to ask that the resolution be acted upon, in order to dispose of it.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to send it to a committee? Is that the purpose?

Mr. STONE. No; I wish the resolution adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Then I think I may cut my remarks very short.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to address himself to the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. I do, if the Senator is opposing the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. STONE. I am not opposing its adoption.

Mr. BORAH. Then I certainly have no desire to take up the time of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution went to the calendar at 2 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. The unfinished business was laid aside temporarily in order that this resolution might be considered and disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I did not so understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair does not so understand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the resolution had already gone to the calendar before the Senator from Missouri suggested that I yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in order that he might address the Senate.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me, as the matter happened it was in this wise: The Chair at 2 o'clock laid the unfinished business before the Senate. At that time the Senator from Mississippi was addressing the Senate on the resolution. I then asked the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] if he would not request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that this resolution might be disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I misunderstood the Senator's request. I understood his request to be simply that the unfinished business be laid aside in order that the Senator from Mississippi, who had already commenced his speech, might be permitted to finish it. Of course, if the Senator from Missouri is very anxious for the consideration of this resolution and the disposal of it——

Mr. STONE. We can dispose of it in a moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I doubt that very much. I think there are some other Senators who desire to discuss the resolution.

Mr. FALL. There is to be no further discussion of it on this side that I know of, unless the Senator from Idaho desires to speak.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Senator from Idaho to say——

Mr. BORAH. I have no desire to discuss the resolution if it is not going to be opposed. If the Senator from Missouri is willing that it shall be adopted, I have no desire to discuss it.

Mr. STONE. I had supposed when the resolution was laid before the Senate that it would be disposed of in five minutes, but the Senator from New Mexico asked certain questions, desired certain information set forth in the resolution, and then proceeded to make a somewhat protracted speech. Mr. President, there is no objection that I know of—and there should be none—to the adoption of the resolution, and I ask that it be now disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to action upon the resolution at this time? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I hope the Senate can proceed this afternoon to a consideration of the committee amendments to the pending Philippines bill. Yesterday I consented that the matter might go over until to-day in order that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] might be present; but it seems to me, after a telephonic communication with him, that he will probably consent, with some of his associates on the other side, to the consideration of the committee amendment, to which, as I understand, he has really no opposition, so that we may make progress by perfecting the bill at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am informed that the Senator from Rhode Island will not be able, on account of illness, to be in the Chamber until next Monday. I suppose the Senator from Nebraska will not object to leaving the amendments that may be passed upon now in such a position that, if the Senator from Rhode Island desires to discuss them or to offer amendments to them, he will have that privilege.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that could be done. Certainly the Senator would have his opportunity to do so when the bill comes into the Senate. I have no desire to press the bill to a vote until the Senator from Rhode Island can be present and can be heard upon the preamble especially, which, I understand, is the point upon which the greatest contention is likely to arise.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island will really be unable, owing to illness, to be here before Monday; but he told me that he wished an opportunity to discuss the preamble before it came to a final vote, and that he expected to be here on Monday.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I shall take the liberty of saying a few words in presenting this bill to the Senate.

This bill contains two essential features. In the first place, it grants to the people of the Philippine Islands a larger degree of self-government than they have heretofore enjoyed. Secondly, it promises ultimate independence. These two features I shall briefly discuss separately, although there is a natural and historical connection between the two. I shall undertake to show that, in so far as the United States has a policy in the Philippine Islands, it embraces a gradual extension of self-government to the people of those islands, and it also includes very definite and positive assurances given to them in the past that under proper conditions they would be permitted to become an independent nation.

At the outset let me say that this is not a partisan bill, because the policy which I have described is a policy which has been upheld by Republicans and Democrats alike. The Republican adherence to this policy is evidenced by the repeated official statements of Presidents of the United States, Secretaries of War, who had the Philippines in charge, and Governors General speaking to the Philippine people in the name of the American Government. Those utterances, which in part I shall quote, indicate conclusively, to my mind, that those high officials have given public and official assurance to the Philippine people, first, that there is gradually to be extended to them on account of the increasing degree of self-government, and, second, that ultimately, some day, under proper conditions the people of the United States were to acknowledge the independence of the Philippine people. So much for the Republican position.

The Democratic attitude heretofore has been confined to the declarations of the Democratic Party in national convention, and those declarations are substantially to the same effect. This bill, therefore, now before the Senate, is here not as a partisan measure, but as expressing the settled purpose of the two parties, the settled policy of the American people. I say, therefore, it is not a partisan measure, and should have, as I believe it will have, not only the general support of this side of the Chamber, but to a large extent the support of Republican Senators as well.

Let me briefly review the course of American-Philippine history. On May 4, 1898, occurred the battle of Manila Bay, in which Admiral Dewey commanded the American forces. During the summer of that year American troops were brought over and the town of Manila was besieged. On August 13 of that year the town of Manila surrendered to Gen. Merritt, head of the American Army. On December 21 of that year, 1898, the President issued his proclamation taking over those islands in the name of the American people—islands 8,000 miles away from the American coast, islands inhabited by 8,000,000 people, of whom nine-tenths were Christians, islands which for 300 years had been in the possession and under the control of the old Spanish monarchy, islands which contain almost as large an area as the British Isles in Europe, islands which lay upon the bosom of the Pacific Ocean in the very shadow of Asia.

On February 22 of the following year, 1899, began the Philippine Insurrection. The Filipino soldiers had assisted the American Army in the conquest of Manila, but in a short time they became restive under the conditions and decided to continue against the Americans, who were taking the sovereign power of the islands, the same insurrection which they had been carrying on against the Spanish Government since 1896. That insurrection began February 22, 1899. On March 4 the first Philippine Commission appointed by the President of the United States arrived in the islands. President Schurman was the chairman of that commission. It was largely, in fact almost wholly, an advisory body, for the real power rested in the military authorities in the islands.

I want to quote briefly from the language used by President McKinley in giving his instructions to that commission, because it illuminates the real purpose of the American people and it vindicates that purpose. He instructed them that they were so to conduct themselves toward the Philippine people as to prove to them that the United States was to be a liberating rather than a conquering Nation.

On April 11, 1899, the treaty with Spain was concluded, by which Spain relinquished forever her claims in those islands. On April 7, 1900, the second commission, with Mr. Taft as chairman, arrived in the islands. To this commission the President of the United States gave for the first time legislative powers, powers which to some extent had been previously exercised by the military authorities. Those powers were now vested in the commission headed by Mr. Taft.

On June 1 of the following year, 1901, the President extended to this commission executive powers to accompany the legislative powers which they possessed. These executive powers were developed by the creation in September, 1901, of executive departments, the heads of which are analogous to our Cabinet officers in the United States.

In October, 1901, the office of vice governor was created by Executive order. Up to this time all powers to be exercised in the name of the United States in the Philippine Islands had been bestowed by the President of the United States under his constitutional war powers. Now, however, in July, 1902, Congress passed what has been known as "the organic act of the Philippine Islands."

The chief purpose of this act was to make the first start in creating a legislative authority in the Philippine Islands in which the Philippine people should have some share and part. This act, as I have said, was passed in 1902, and under its authority occurred the census of the Philippine Islands from 1903 to 1905. After that census and after a lapse of two years, which the organic act required, the new Philippine Legislature was organized, a legislature consisting of two houses—an upper house, called "the commission," having nine members and being appointed by the President of the United States; and a lower house, called "the assembly," consisting of 81 members, and being elected for the first time in the history of the Philippine Islands by the Philippine people.

Thus matters stood in the Philippine Islands until the advent of the present administration. The commission, which was the upper house of the Philippine Legislature, was not only appointed by the President of the United States, but he had always placed upon that commission a majority of American citizens. When President Wilson came into power, however, he proceeded to carry out in spirit the policy of the Democratic Party, as well as the policy of the American people, as I think, by appointing a majority of Filipinos upon the commission; so that for the last two years the upper house of the Philippine Legislature as well as the lower house has been in the control of the Philippine people.

The effect of that change, the effect of giving to the Philippine people a majority of the upper house as well as of the lower house, was at once to do away with a great cause of friction, irritation, and disagreement which had existed for some time. For five years no appropriation bill had been passed, because the two houses were unable to agree upon one. For all that time the old appropriations had been continued automatically, but as soon as the Philippine people came into possession of their upper house the appropriation bills passed; and it is to the credit of the Philippine people, it is to the everlasting credit of the present Governor General of the Philippine Islands that the legislation of the Philippine Legislature during the last two years has been legislation in the direction of economy and progress.

I hope there will not come into this discussion any of the unfair, unjust, and unfounded criticism which has crept into the public press, directed against Gov. Gen. Harrison. I am prepared to meet it if it does; but it seems to me that it is unworthy of the American people and of public men to attempt to make political capital out of the administration of a great trust such as we have in the Philippine Islands.

Francis Burton Harrison, after an honorable service in the House of Representatives, went to the Philippine Islands to perform a difficult task. He went there to inaugurate to some extent a different policy, a modification of the old policy. He went there to put an end to the extravagance of administration in the Philippine Islands which had resulted in recent years in the accumulation of a large floating debt, and which was annually producing a growing deficit. He went there to displace to some extent Americans who were holding office in the Philippine Government, and to turn those positions over to the Filipinos themselves, under the solemn promises heretofore made to the Philippine people that that should be done. He went there to take his place in a government the legislative powers of which were to be wholly within the hands of the Philippine people. He has made a success. Under him and under the Philippine Legislature taxes have been reduced 18 per cent. The expenditures of 1914 compared with 1913 were reduced ₱5,500,000, a peso being 50 cents.

In addition to this, it should be said that Gov. Gen. Harrison's administration has been handicapped by the same difficulties which have confronted our own Government and all the Governments of South and Central America growing out of the great war in Europe. The customs revenues in 1914, which is the last year for which I have figures, were cut down as the result of that war 1,707,000 pesos. Not only that, but the present Philippine administration has had to struggle with the embarrassments growing out of the act of Congress which prohibited the Philippine Legislature from levying an export tax upon the products of the Philippine Islands. This provision in the last tariff bill passed by Congress was doubtless considered to be in the interests of the American people, but it has resulted in depriving the Philippine government of something like 2,000,000 pesos of annual revenue. In spite of that, in spite of these embarrassments, the Governor General, in the message which he delivered to the Third Philippine Legislature last October, used this language:

> The two years through which this government has just passed have been a period of economy and reform. The headlong rush of the insular government toward bankruptcy has been effectually checked and by the exercise of the greatest patience and self-denial the legislative and executive officials of the government have succeeded in placing the treasury upon a sound basis. This year, for the first time since 1910, an actual cash balance will be found at the end of our annual operations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am interested in the discussion of this question. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska where these great savings were made. If there was a loss of a million and a half pesos of revenue at the customhouse, and another loss of an equal amount by a change in the law regarding an import duty, as the Senator asserts, how did they happen to save ₱5,000,000? How did they do it? Was there maladministration? Was there fraud in the former conduct of affairs in the Philippine Islands, or what other explanation can be given?

I ask the question in good faith, because I should like to know just how it was accomplished. It would seem to show that the Filipinos are better able to administer the affairs of their country than educated and intelligent Americans, which is inconceivable to me. I can not understand it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the inquiry is a fair one, and I wish I were in a position to answer it in detail, which, unfortunately, I am not. I have not that detailed knowledge of the affairs of the Philippine Islands which would make it possible for me to answer the question in detail.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in relation to that matter, with the consent of the chairman of the committee. One of the principal savings that has been made in the Philippine Islands is through the reduction of salaries. Nearly every salary has been cut a considerable amount, a reduction of some $2,000 or $2,500 having been made in the salary of the Governor General himself. In addition, there has been——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I can state to the Senator, as I recall it, that the large salaries have been reduced 20 per cent and the smaller salaries have been reduced 10 per cent. I think that covers it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator care to answer the inquiry further?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that another very important matter of economy has been in the fact that heretofore a summer capital has been used by the officers during some three or four months of the year. The cost of transporting the large number of clerks—I think some 1,500—to Baguio from Manila constituted quite a considerable item, and there was great expenditure for the number of automobiles and things of that kind that were required to transport those people from Dagupan, which is a point on the railroad, to Baguio, which is the summer capital, and that has made a saving of no doubt many hundreds of thousands of dollars. Gov. Gen. Harrison has taken the position that under these conditions, the treasury not being in proper form so far as revenues are concerned, it would be better to omit that in many particulars. There have been some appropriations that have been passed over—that is, that were not considered as wise and proper to be made during the last two or three years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, how much did I understand the Senator to say the discontinuance of transferring the clerks to this summer resort and back has saved the Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In the three years I should think it would be several hundred thousand dollars; perhaps two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BORAH. I am informed that it was about $1,500.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; it can not be. The cost for each individual fare alone is $50, as I understand, from Manila to Bagio.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator the figures, so that they can be furnished?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I have not the figures. That was simply a general expression, that it was a large saving, and I have no doubt it was.

Mr. BORAH. I simply desired to get some degree of accuracy about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think perhaps I can give some details that will help in illustrating this point. For instance, in the matter of bureaus and officers, which would naturally constitute salaries to a large extent, the expenditures for 1914 were ₱17,224,000, whereas in 1913 they were ₱18,794,000, and in the previous year they were over ₱20,000,000, showing an actual reduction in the cost of operating the government. There was some reduction in the amount expended for public works. There was some gain in the income from productive funds. And so, by a careful attention to the details of government, the Governor General, with the very active cooperation of the Philippine Legislature and the Philippine public men, has been able to achieve this saving of 18 per cent in the cost of the Philippine government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust that the Senator, at his convenience, will elaborate this matter a little more and place the figures in the RECORD. It seems to me almost inconceivable that this saving should have been made legitimately when there was a large shrinkage in the receipts, as the Senator has set forth, from the repeal of the export law and from the revenue collected at the customhouse. The Senator from Colorado says that the salaries have all been cut. I presume that is so. I believe the Governor General gets now $18,000 a year; does he not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand it was reduced from $20,500 to $18,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the amount in both cases is exorbitant. I think a further saving might be made there. It seems to me that all along the line there have been excessive salaries paid in the Philippine Islands.

I have no disposition at all to call in question the good conduct of the present Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and I trust that no imputation will be placed upon those who preceded him. I presume he has been exerting himself to administer the Government as economically as possible. As the Senator from Colorado sets forth, if they had a summer capital where they transported a couple of thousand clerks, more or less, back and forth, of course a great saving was effected when that was abandoned, and I think it ought to have been abandoned.

I thank the Senator for permitting me to ask the question I did, for the reason that on this question I want to get as exact information as possible, because I want to cast a vote that will be for the best interests of the people of the Philippine Islands, and at the same time I do not want to deny them any privileges or opportunities for advancement that they can claim; but before they are given practically control of their affairs I want to be sure that they are qualified to discharge the duties imposed on them.

The Senator from Colorado, as I remember, made a suggestion that there was a large saving made by holding up some appropriations for public improvements. I fear that in withholding those appropriations the building of roads has been halted in the islands, and I also fear that possibly economies have been made in other directions that may not be for the best interests of the people. I am in favor of legislation that will tend to elevate the Filipinos and fit them as speedily as possible for self-government, which point they certainly have not as yet reached. The people of the islands have made wonderful progress since they came under the jurisdiction of our Government, and I hope that the pending bill, if it shall become law, will not in any way hinder but rather advance that progress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have made a mistake if I have conveyed to the Senate the impression that I desired to criticize the former administrations of the Philippine Islands. I do not. I was commending the Governor General for the heroic effort he had made in the direction of economy. He may have gone far; but rather than criticize the work which has been done in the Philippine Islands since the American occupation, I desire to glorify it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The American occupation of the Philippine Islands is the finest example of an altruistic effort by a great country to bring the blessings of civilized government to a weak people. In all the history of the world there is nothing that approaches it. I am appealing to my Republican friends, not by way of criticizing what has gone in the past but for the purpose of securing their support for this great step for the future; and I am going to show them by quotations from Republican public men that we owe it to the Philippine people to take the step proposed in this bill.

Why, Mr. President, when we think of the condition of the Philippine people 15 years ago, and look back over the great work that has been carried on for their elevation and their education and for fitting them for self-government, we may well be proud of it, regardless of what party we belong to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One moment. To-day there are 500,000 Filipino children going to public schools, learning English, prosecuting the studies that will make them better citizens; 500,000 children whose minds are being trained, whose bodies are being improved, who are being taught the great advantages and the great opportunities that come from a higher standard of living. That work is creditable to the American people, and it is that work which this bill will continue and promote.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply wanted to ask whether a large amount of the saving referred to by the Senator has not been brought about by the discontinuance of the building of roads and other internal improvements that were engaged in to a very large extent up to two years ago?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will put the table in the RECORD in order that it may be seen, as far as I am able to show, just what the change was. There has been some reduction in public works in the Philippine Islands, just as there has been in the United States and everywhere in the world; but, in the main, the remarkable economies have been brought about, as they should be brought about in the United States, by reducing the cost of government without impairing its benefits.

Now, Mr. President, let me put in the RECORD some of the quotations upon which I rely to show to my Republican friends that this bill carries out, to the extent of one step at least, the solemn promises and pledges made by eminent Republicans in official places. I shall not read all of these, but I shall take the liberty of putting in the RECORD some which I will not take the time to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We all know what President McKinley said. At least we will readily recall it, I am sure; and he said it in different ways on several occasions. He said:

> The Philippines are ours, not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government. This is the path of duty which we must follow or be recreant to a mighty trust committed to us.

In his instructions sent to one of the commissions created by him he said:

> That in all cases the municipal officers who administer the local affairs of the people are to be selected by the people, and that wherever officers of more extended jurisdiction are to be selected in any way natives of the islands are to be preferred; and if they can be found competent and willing to perform the duties they are to receive the offices in preference to any others. It will be necessary to fill some offices for the present with Americans, which after a time may well be filled by natives of the islands.

Gov. Gen. Harrison has been carrying out that purpose and that policy. It has caused some friction there to relieve Americans who were upon the pay roll and give their positions to Filipinos, but it is carrying out the solemn promise made to the Philippine people by President McKinley.

President Taft, while civil governor of the Philippine Islands, said, in 1903:

> From the beginning to the end of the State papers which were circulated in these islands as authoritative expressions of the Executive, the motto that "the Philippines are for the Filipinos," and that the Government of the United States is here for the purpose of preserving the "Philippines for the Filipinos," for their benefit, for their elevation, for their civilization, again and again and again appear.

A little later on Gov. Gen. Taft was attacked by American papers published in Manila, just as Gov. Gen. Harrison has been attacked, because, in the opinion of those editors, he was proceeding too far to extend self-government to the Filipino people. Here is what he replied:

> Some of our young lions of the local press have spoken of the "childish slogan," "The Philippines for the Filipinos." It is unnecessary to comment on the adjective used, but it is sufficient to say that, whether childish or not, the principle makes up the web and the woof of the policy of the United States with respect to these islands, as it has been authoritatively declared by two Presidents of the United States—for President Roosevelt has followed sedulously the policy of President McKinley—and by the interpretation of the supreme popular will, the Congress of the United States.

He referred to the fact that the Congress of the United States, in passing the organic act, had indicated the same purpose, and had declared that that act was only for the temporary government of the Philippine people.

Mr. Taft, then Governor General—or civil governor, as it was then called—in a quotation of which I shall read only a part, said:

The doctrine—

That is, "The Philippines for the Filipinos"—

Does not include, necessarily, the independence of the Filipinos nor any particular degree of autonomy. It is entirely consistent with the principle to object to an immediate extension of popular government on the ground that we are going too fast for the political digestion of the people, and that it is not, therefore, for their good. Whether an autonomy or independence or quasi-independence shall ultimately follow in these islands ought to depend solely on the question—

Now, what? What question is that to depend on? Is it to depend upon the will of politicians in the United States? Is it to depend even upon the welfare of the United States? No. Mr. Taft declared that—

Whether an autonomy or independence or quasi-independence shall ultimately follow in these islands ought to depend solely on the question, Is it best for the Philippine people and their welfare?

That is the question and that is the declaration that has been made to the Philippine people. It is one of many statements made to the people of the Philippine Islands officially by the representatives of the United States, and they have accepted it as the pledge of the American people.

He goes on, in the same statement, to say:

I think I have demonstrated by what I have quoted and the instances I have cited that the doctrine, "The Philippines for the Filipinos," is one which the honor of the United States requires it to enforce throughout those islands. Not only was it promised to the Filipinos when the Americans came, after they had been here, during the insurrection and at its close, but I do not think it too much to say that the reiteration of the promises as shown in legislation carrying out these principles had much to do with bringing about the present tranquillity in these islands.

Our pledge to those people had much to do with bringing about the tranquillity of the islands and leaving them to accept for the time being our sovereignty and control.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire or is he willing to admit an interruption?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. The point just made by the Senator from Nebraska is a very interesting one and, of course, refers to the preamble of the proposed legislation. Does the Senator from Nebraska believe that the preamble as it is reported to the Senate is a promise or assurance of ultimate independence?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think so, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to suggest—and I am asking for information rather than otherwise, because I think there is no great difference of opinion between the Senator from Nebraska and myself—allow me to suggest that the test you propose is the permanent interest of the people of the Philippines as viewed by the Congress of the United States. Suppose that I as a Member of Congress am called upon to apply that test. Suppose that I believe it would be better for the people of the Philippine Islands to remain permanently attached to the United States as a State, with all the privileges of a State or otherwise, would I not fulfill the promise or assurance of the preamble in voting to retain the Philippine Islands as a part of the territory of the United States?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume the Senator would.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, is that a proper test? Is it not true that if we intend honestly, sincerely to prepare for the entire separation of the Philippine Islands from the United States, the test ought to be not what we may think is best for the interests of the people of that country, but are they at a given time able to establish and maintain a free and stable government?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would not that involve the question of their permanent welfare?

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Because if they are not able to do that certainly it would be detrimental to them.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; because——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that this form of preamble is the result of a great deal of discussion, and it is the result of an effort to avoid putting into the preamble anything which would seem to offend the feelings of the Philippine people to imply that they are not now fitted for self-government. It is, perhaps, not so strong a statement as was put in the preamble as reported by the committee at the last Congress, but it is a form which is acceptable to the Philippine Legislature; it is acceptable to the Filipino leaders; it is acceptable to the Philippine people, so far as we know. They are willing to trust the judgment of the United States to give them their independence when it is to the interests of the islands to have it. They have received up to this time nothing but the most beneficent treatment from the United States, and the feeling toward the United States is of the very best. We have over there a handful of men, ten or twelve thousand, and 5,000 constabulary, and perfect peace prevails in that great archipelago of several thousand islands and 8,000,000 people. It is as safe to travel from one end of the archipelago to the other as it is to cross the State of Iowa. There is less crime in those islands than in many civilized portions of the world, and the conditions there—the feeling toward the American people, toward the United States—is such that at this time this form of preamble will be accepted by them as a fulfillment of our past pledge. It is an official statement of the people of the United States in Congress assembled.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am very happy to know that the promise we give in this preamble is satisfactory to the people of the Philippines. Just how the consensus of opinion among the Philippine people has been taken I have not been advised; but I assert with a good deal of clearness in my own mind that this preamble changes radically the promise that has heretofore been made to the people of the Philippine Islands and to the people of the United States. It must not be assumed from anything I have said that I favor the retention of the Philippines as a part of the permanent territory of the United States. I do not; but I am unwilling to transform that vague but really well-understood promise that whenever the Philippine people were able to maintain a stable government of any kind, no matter whether it was our kind or not, we would give them the opportunity to do it.

Now, by this preamble there is presented to me and to every Member of Congress the question, whether I believe that the Philippine people would be better off, whether their welfare would be promoted, whether they would grow rich more rapidly, be better governed, as a part of the United States or as an independent State or country. I think we are doing a grave injustice to the history of the relations established between the United States and the Philippines to now change the understanding by the use of this language.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to make a statement to the Senator from Iowa, if the chairman of the committee will yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that this preamble to the bill is very largely a compromise among members of the committee. I favored and preferred the House provision, which was that we were to give the Filipinos independence when they established a stable form of government; but objection was raised that a stable form of government exists there now, and that such a declaration would mean nothing. There developed considerable difference of opinion as to the best language to be used, and we concluded the phraseology adopted in the bill as reported at the last session of Congress was the proper provision. The Philippine people are very sensitive about the words "fit for self-government." They are a very highly educated class of people, and are ably represented in the legislature, which is called the General Assembly of the Philippine Islands. They do not like the words "fit for self-government," because they feel that they are fit now. The result was that as a compromise we fixed upon the provision as it is now. I look upon it, just as I have no doubt the Filipinos regard it, as carrying out in good faith the intention of the Government of the United States, that when the time comes the United States will not resort to subterfuges and will not attempt to evade that which is clearly the intention of the Congress to carry out if this preamble should be passed.

I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that the Legislature or General Assembly of the Philippine Islands last February passed a resolution or memorial to the Congress of the United States thanking the House of Representatives for the passage of the Jones bill, which provided for the establishment of a government as soon as a stable government could be maintained, and they urged the Senate and the President to use their best efforts to get that bill through.

These various changes are changes which have been suggested by Members. I do not know that we are bound as a committee to stand by whatever statement is found there if some other form should prove to be more satisfactory; and I believe, of course, the Congress of the United States would adopt it. It is something of a definite nature, and for that reason I should like to see it in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just one word. I rather sympathize with the suggestion that the words "fit for self-government" ought not to be used and would be something of a disparagement, but there are a great many other problems connected with the government of the Philippine Islands that do not relate to the fitness of a portion of the population to exercise all the privileges of free government. I am not captious about words; I am not critical about forms of expression; but the bill that was reported by the committee at the last session, while I think I could have expressed it more agreeably to the people of the Philippine Islands, meant something to me and did contain an assurance or promise that under certain conditions the separation should take place. This language means to me that so long as the Congress of the United States believes that we can govern the Philippine Islands better than the people themselves can govern them no separation shall take place.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the preamble as reported in the Senate at the last session of Congress left the determination as to when they should be fitted for self-government to the discretion of the American Congress, and that being the case, if Congress were to attempt by some subterfuge to evade the promise of independence you can very readily see that they would be in the same position they are in now. The Philippine people are desirous that the word "independence" should be in an act of Congress. They have had it time and again, as the Senator from Nebraska has said, in the expressions of the Governor General and in the expressions of Presidents of the United States, but they have never had the word "independence" by an act of Congress; and they want that word there for the moral influence it will have in turning the government over to them.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Colorado does not address himself at all to the point I have been considering. I think the word "independence" ought unquestionably to be in the preamble if we have any preamble. My inquiry related to the standard, the guide that hereafter should determine what the American Congress shall do. If the question is presented to me, for instance, Are the people of the Philippine Islands prepared to establish and maintain a free and independent government? as an honest man I would answer the question yes or no, according to the fact, no matter what the interest of the people of the United States might be. But if the question were submitted to me, Is it for the best interests of the people of the Philippine Islands that they separate themselves from the American Nation? I must answer that question honestly, and it might be answered, it would not be for the best interests of the people of the Philippine Islands to separate themselves from the American Nation, even though I could affirm that it was within the probabilities that the country there would establish and maintain a free and stable government. I might believe that their prosperity and welfare would be better served as a State of the American Nation than as an independent country. That is the difference between the standard proposed heretofore and the rule proposed now, for if this preamble is adopted I do not believe that it contains any promise or any assurance of ultimate independence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if he has formed any opinion as to how long it will take the Philippine people to acquire that capacity for self-government which would warrant the United States in giving over to them independence?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not, Mr. President. I express no opinion upon it. If I were preparing a measure of this sort, there would be no preamble in it; but if we had to have a preamble, if, as the chairman of the committee has said, the time has come for the people of the United States to give an assurance of ultimate independence, then I want the test or the standard which is to determine the question, so that it may be in compliance with the assurance, for, I repeat, I do not look upon this preamble as containing any assurance whatever of ultimate independence.

Mr. BORAH. In that respect I approve of the preamble. When you take into consideration that the preamble does seem to warrant the conclusion that they are not to have independence until they are fitted for self-government, then the proposition is presented to us, How long will it likely be until these people in the course of things are fitted for self-government? It is scarcely worth while quarreling over their independence perhaps a hundred years in advance of their capacity to exercise it.

Mr. STONE. Before the Senator from Nebraska answers that question I should like to be clear as to the meaning of the Senator from Idaho. Is it the position of the Senator that he is unwilling at any time to grant political independence to the Philippine people?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; but I am unwilling, since our sovereignty has been fortunately or unfortunately set over those people, to be talking about independence with that insincerity furrowed upon the face of it, which indicates that we have no disposition ourselves to carry it out, and we have no power to impose the duty upon our successors to carry it out.

Mr. STONE. With that expression I am very much in sympathy, but I should like to follow it by asking the Senator, in order to make us entirely sincere in our treatment of the Philippines, what would the honorable Senator from Idaho suggest as to the time within which we should take our hands off?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Anglo-Saxon people had a schooling of about 1,000 years in self-government. After some of them landed upon this continent, they had about 200 or 300 years more, and, in my judgment, they were not fitted for self-government a day before the Declaration of Independence was written.

Mr. STONE. Then the Senator would postpone it for about 1,300 years?

Mr. BORAH. I would not postpone it at all. I would not talk about a thing which is manifestly insincere in itself. I would not promise the Philippine people a thing which we do not give them any assurance of carrying out, and we know we can not impose upon our successors the obligation to carry it out. I would above all things deal with them sincerely and promise nothing that it was not within our intention and our power to fulfill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would the Senator be willing to insert in the bill a provision that they should have independence after a given number of years?

Mr. BORAH. No, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He would not?

Mr. BORAH. I would say this to the Philippine people, that we will give you all the training in self-government from time to time and from year to year and decade to decade that it is possible for you to enjoy, and after you have been sufficiently trained in the duties of self-government to enjoy independence we will then take up with you the question of independence. I would urge upon them to fit themselves by the exercise of the duties of local self-government and I would direct their attention now exclusively to preparation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is leaving it entirely with us for determination as to when that time will come and without indicating we will ever give them independence.

Mr. BORAH. Let me read to you from one whom the Senator from Colorado will accept without any question, and whose philosophy I accept in this matter without any hesitancy. I read from an article written by Woodrow Wilson in 1901, and I think it states the true position upon the Philippine question; I read it because I think it sound doctrine and not for criticism.

> In China, of course, our part will be indirect, but in the Philippines it will be direct; and there in particular must the moral of our policy be set up and vindicated.
> This we shall do, not by giving them out of hand our codes of political morality or our methods of political action, the generous gifts of complete individual liberty or the full-fangled institutions of American self-government—a purple garment for their nakedness—for these things are not blessings, but a curse, to undeveloped peoples, still in the childhood of their political growth; but by giving them, in the spirit of service, a government and rule which shall moralize them by being itself moral, elevate and steady them by being itself pure and steadfast, inducting them into the rudiments of justice and freedom. In other words, it is the aid of our character they need, and not the premature aid of our institutions. Our institutions must come after the ground of character and habit has been made ready for them; as effect, not cause, in the order of political growth.

The President, in discussing this same question as to how long it takes a people to acquire the capacity for self-government, refers to the fact that the Anglo-Saxon race were a thousand years in acquiring this capacity, and then he adds, notwithstanding, he says, that the nineteenth century has been a century of democracy:

> It is no longer possible to mistake the reaction against democracy. The nineteenth century was, above all others, a century of democracy, and yet the world is no more convinced of the benefits of democracy as a form of government at its end than it was at the beginning.

The sum logic of this article, which, if the spirit of it was put into this bill, in my judgment, there would be very little opposition to it, is that the first thing to do is to train these people in character, in intelligence, in capacity, in initiative, to spread the spirit of self-government among them, language, and solidarity, and unity of spirit, and then talk to them about independence.

I assert, Mr. President, that it is an act of insincerity to the Philippine people to talk to them about independence years and years in advance of their capacity to enjoy it. We know that this Congress is not going to give it to them; we have no intention of giving it to them; and we can not impose upon our successors the obligation to give it to them. There is one thing we can do, we ourselves, this Congress, we can widen their duties, enlarge their functions in government; we can extend the circumference of governmental action, and thus train them more and more for independence. But it will be a long time before they have learned the lesson.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In answer to the Senator from Idaho, I will say that while history shows we have evolved our principles of self-government not without a great deal of struggle and long and trying experience, yet we know that there are republics on this continent, like Argentina, Brazil, Chile, and others, that are dedicated to the loftiest ideals of liberty and freedom. Shall we say that Argentina is not capable of self-government? We find that Chile is a self-governing Republic. Shall we say that it is not capable because it did not have the thousand years of struggle and experience that we had? Can it be said that Brazil is not capable of self-government because it had not experience similar to ours?

Mr. President, the Philippine people have been under a government for 300 years. Nine-tenths of the Philippine people are Christians. They have always maintained a creditable system of education. We know that there were 2,000 public schools in the Philippine Islands before the American occupation, and the Senator from Nebraska has told you of the spread of education since that time and that there are now 500,000 pupils attending the public schools in the islands.

I want to say to the Senator that it is not the illiterate people who control in government. They are not the ones who are elected to pass upon legislative matters. The very best men, those of highest education, are elected by the Filipinos for membership in their legislature, which consists of 81 members. Of those 81 members, every single one is a graduate of a college or university. Can you point to such a record as that anywhere in the wide world? In the States men may criticize the Philippine government, but you will find that in your own State legislatures you have not more than about 30 per cent of college graduates; and it seems to me it comes with poor taste, with such a showing, to say that the Filipinos are not capable, that they are not amply able to maintain government and to establish government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no doubt that the Philippine Islands have a class who are fit for government. It is precisely against that condition of affairs that my mind is directed. Mexico has had a class fit for government for 300 years. She has had a class that has ruled Mexico for 300 years under the name of a Republic, but it is as absolute a despotism as ever existed on the face of the earth. It has now been nearly a century since they seriously began to move toward real democracy. They are no nearer a successful free government or Republic at the end of a hundred years than they were at the time the statesman priest called them together for that purpose. Still, they have an intelligent class—a very intelligent class—of people among them. But this intelligent class, considering themselves a class, have always exploited and oppressed the masses, the common people of Mexico.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, why does the Senator——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator to be as brief as possible.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will. Why does the Senator from Idaho refer to another country, one of the Latin American Republics that has no similarity of character or of race with the Filipinos, and argue that because they have not shown themselves capable of self-government therefore the Filipino race is incapable of self-government?

Mr. BORAH. I refer to Mexico for the reason that the same class of explorers and exploiters discovered Mexico and reduced it to subjection that discovered the Philippine Islands and reduced them to subjection about the same time, 300 years ago. The same Government, the same master, has been over the Philippine people that was over the Mexican people. The same Spanish Government, the same succession of heartless rulers.

It is no easy task to lift these people into that region of self-confidence and character which will enable them to step from under the customs and habits of three centuries and into the atmosphere and faith of men who know what free institutions are and how to enjoy and preserve them. A few men in the Philippines might be found who would meet the requirements, but I am speaking of the great majority of the people—the masses.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is not a question as to who has ruled; it is the question of the people that are ruled. When we find that the Mexicans are composed of about 80 per cent Indians, it can readily be seen why a warlike and revolutionary disposition would exist there.

Mr. BORAH. Why, Mr. President, at the time the Spanish people took possession of Mexico Mexico had a civilization which was then in advance of any civilization which characterized the Filipinos even at the time the Americans took possession of those islands, a little over 15 years ago. The advancement in mechanics, in the arts, in poetry, in literature, in building, and in everything else in Mexico was in advance of the Philippine people in 1900 and 1901.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, Mr. President, it seems to me that is a statement that can not be borne out by the facts.

Mr. BORAH. I will present the Senator the story of the "Conquest of Mexico," by Mr. Prescott.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have read the "Conquest of Mexico," by Mr. Prescott, and I say that when the Americans took possession of the Philippines they found there a condition that was much better than has ever existed in the Republic of Mexico. We found that there had been more of education in the Philippines. The Filipinos are not of the same temperament as are the people of Mexico. They are of a submissive character; they are not revolutionary in their tendencies; consequently they are more capable of maintaining government.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator really serious when he says that in his judgment we never intend to give independence to the people of the Philippines?

Mr. BORAH. I have not said anything of that kind.

Mr. KENYON. I understood the Senator to say that we never intended to do it. I think the RECORD will show that.

Mr. BORAH. No; what I said was that we here, this Congress, has no intention of doing so; and this bill shows it. If anything is clear from this preamble it is that this Congress does not propose independence or even propose a definite time for independence.

Mr. KENYON. But the Senator does contend that this Nation does not so intend?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know what the Nation intends to do, but I think it extremely wise that we legislate ourselves—do what we can do. I do not know whether our successors will do it or not, but I know that the disposition of the Anglo-Saxon race is not to let anything loose it has gotten hold of; I know that, instead of releasing territory, with a single exception, we have for the last hundred years been reaching out and seizing territory. I know that we went to war with Mexico solely for the purpose of getting territory; that we went to war with Spain for humanitarian reasons, and came back with a large slice of territory. I know that we got the Philippines. I do not know whether or not we are going to give them up. I would not want to give any promises upon the part of my successors, but I do know that we ought not to say to those people a thing concerning a matter so important as that of their independence, which, upon the face of it, carries the inference that it is not to be performed within the lifetime of this Congress or of the people who are sitting in this Congress. I do not want to practice duplicity with a dependent people. What we are willing to do and can do let us do, but in the name of our honor let us not use these vague, indefinite, and manifestly insincere expressions which really mean nothing.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not believe, does he, that this Government should impose a government upon another people and continue so to do, except out of the exigencies of the occasion, without the consent of the governed?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; not without "the exigencies of the occasion"; but who knows what the exigencies of the occasion will be. When the time comes to give them independence they may be like the people of Texas when they seceded from Mexico. They may say, "We infinitely prefer to be under the flag of the United States; we infinitely prefer to be a part of the great Republic of the United States." It may be, as the English language comes more and more to be spoken in the Philippines and they come more and more to be acquainted with our form of government and the fact that they are protected against the other nations of the earth, that they will desire to remain with us. I think if the time ever comes when the people of the Philippines are indeed capable of self-government, and they still desire to be free and independent, the United States will give them their freedom. I hope it will. But I want them to be prepared for independence, so that the common people, the submerged 80 per cent, will have some capacity to take care of themselves

Mr. KENYON. In view of our Declaration of Independence, if its principles were to be applied, does the Senator think we could impose a government upon those people against their consent?

Mr. BORAH. Well, assuming that when the time comes, it is against their consent, there is something in that; we can not do it; but does the Senator think the Philippine people are now fit for self-government?

Mr. KENYON. I do not.

Mr. BORAH. How long does the Senator think it will be before they will be so fitted?

Mr. KENYON. I think they will be so fitted in the course of 10 or 12 years. As has been shown here, their children are in the schools to the number of 500,000. There has a race of educated people come up there in the last two or three years to some extent, but just when those people will be qualified for self-government would be a problematic question now in view of the highly civilized nations of the earth killing each other off. The Filipinos have been peaceful; they are a law-abiding people. I do not believe they are now fit for self-government, nor do I know when they will be; but I do believe that they have been led to believe, whether intentionally or not, upon the part of those who have governed them, that they are to have independence. Having been led so to believe, it seems to me rather hypocritical now, when they desire some statement of that kind, not to say so to them. I would be glad to say so frankly in any other form of preamble that could be drawn.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, the hyprocrisy of this situation consists in talking to these people about a very dear right, but a right which we are not willing to give now and which we are not willing to promise them at any definite time in the future, and a right which we can not assure them that our successors will give them. Hypocrisy consists in glittering generalities which mean nothing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like briefly to continue my remarks. There is a little danger of my losing the floor and the thread of my argument. I wondered if it would be possible that this discussion could be concluded without some quotation from Woodrow Wilson by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I only wish he would follow the practical suggestions of Woodrow Wilson with the same persistency that he adopts and publishes the academic discussions of Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that if the Senator from Idaho follows pretty religiously and undertakes to live up to that which the President taught in his books for 30 years, he is obliged to change his course because the President has changed his?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No. The Senator from Nebraska only regrets that the Senator from Idaho limits his adoption of Woodrow Wilson's views to academic discussions, and that he is never apparently willing to accept his practical political suggestions.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Nebraska has got me right exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, concluding these quotations from representative Republicans, Mr. President, without quoting Roosevelt, who is interesting, let me again quote Mr. Taft, who is qualified to speak, who did speak, and who spoke directly to the Philippine people. I put these quotations in at this time for the reason that the Senator from Idaho has raised the question whether we ought to make this promise to the Philippine people. He raises the question too late. We have already made that promise to the Philippine people. We have made it from the mouth of our accredited representatives in the Philippine Islands; we have made it from reports by the Secretary of War, who is charged with jurisdiction over the Philippine Islands; we have made it in the messages of two Presidents of the United States; and while there may be Americans who are not familiar with those statements, those statements are well known in the Philippine Islands; the Philippine people have acted on them, have accepted them, and from President Taft himself we have the assurance that those statements have led the Philippine people to accept with docility and with confidence the statements of the American Government. It is those statements which have secured tranquility in the islands. Now that this issue has been raised in Congress, it would inevitably be a subject for doubt, and possibly disorder, in the islands if those solemn statements made by American officials to the Philippine people should be repudiated by the American Congress.

Listen to what Mr. Taft, in opening the Philippine Assembly on the 10th of October, 1907, said:

> The avowed policy of the national administration under these two Presidents has been and is to govern the islands, having regard to the interests and welfare of the Philippine people, and by the spread of general primary and industrial education and by practice in partial political control to fit the people themselves to maintain a stable and well-ordered government affording equality of right and opportunity to all citizens. The policy looks to the improvement of the people both industrially and in self-governing capacity. As this policy of extending control continues, it must logically reduce and finally end the sovereignty of the United States in the islands.

This is a statement made by the Governor General to the Philippine Assembly. He qualifies it. Let me give the qualification so that there may be no question of an inaccurate quotation:

> End the sovereignty of the United States in the islands, unless it shall seem wise for the American and the Philippine peoples on account of mutually beneficial trade relations and possible advantage to the islands in their foreign relation that the bond shall not be completely severed.

The Senator from Iowa some time ago asked me whether I believed that this preamble contained a pledge of independence, and I answered him that I did so believe; but I do not think that it inevitably closes the door to some future arrangement that may be mutually made between the American Government and the Philippine people in case they find, as they become more advanced, that they need the protecting friendship of the United States. They may never ask of the United States and never desire from the United States complete independence. Some of their most eminent men will, if consulted on this subject, now say that in the lapse of time it may turn out that the foreign relations of the Philippine Islands can be better managed through the United States than by the Philippine people themselves. That is for the future to decide; but for the present let us make good the promise solemnly given by our Presidents and by our Governors General in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, let me give, if the Senator will permit me, another quotation from Mr. Taft—and this is from a special report made by Secretary Taft, as Secretary of War, I suppose, on the Philippines and their political future. He says:

> The conditions in the islands to-day vindicate and justify that policy. It necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater the ultimate independence of the islands.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Nebraska really think that the preamble of the bill embodies the promise or assurance given by Mr. Taft in the extract which he has just read?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When we come to the discussion of the preamble of the bill I shall be very glad to enter into it with the Senator, and I think there will be then revealed to him difficulties and objections to other forms, which are obviated in this particular form.

I am gratified to find that the Senator from Iowa, rather than objecting to the preamble because it goes too far, merely takes the position that it does not go far enough. We have endeavored to be conservative here; we have endeavored in this preamble to be as conservative as we can, consistent with satisfying the people of the Philippine Islands that we are keeping our pledge.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think there ought to be any preamble at all. Although I do believe that we are in honor bound to carry out the policy that has been so frequently declared, I think it ought not to be in the preamble to the bill; but my objection to the preamble is that it does not go in the same direction with the promises that have heretofore been made. It establishes an entirely different policy and prescribes a wholly different standard, and I, for one, am not willing to participate in the change which this preamble creates in the attitude of the United States toward the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, as I have said, that is a matter which I shall be glad to discuss when we reach the preamble. I presume it will be the last matter taken up.

In conclusion, I want briefly to call the attention of the Senate to the gist of this bill. It is not a revolutionary bill. The legislative features of this bill enlarge the degree of local self-government in a very natural but a very moderate way, and it is chiefly in enlarging the legislative independence of the Philippine government that this bill acts. At the present time the legislature in the Philippines consists of the commission, of 9 members appointed by the President of the United States, and of the Assembly, which is a body of 81 members elected by the Philippine people in 81 districts. The bill now before the Senate proposes to create the Philippine Legislature, which shall be composed of an upper body of 24 members, 22 of whom shall be elected by the people in 12 districts and 2 of whom shall be appointed by the Governor General to represent the interests of the non-Christian tribes in the Philippine Senate. The lower house of the Philippine Legislature is to consist of a body of 90 members, 81 to be elected in the 81 legislative districts, as heretofore, by the Philippine people, and 9 to be selected by the Governor General to represent the interests of the non-Christian tribes. To this legislature are given general legislative powers.

The members of the commission heretofore have had both legislative and executive powers, and so has the Governor General; but hereafter the Governor General is to be an independent executive, holding a position similar to that of the governor of a State. He is to have the power of veto. His veto may be overridden by a two-thirds vote of the legislature in each house; but, if so overriden, the bill is still subject to the absolute veto of the President of the United States. The Governor General is to have the power of appointment of most of the Philippine officials. His power of appointment is subject to the right of the Senate to confirm.

The bill as reported by the committee injects certain safeguards for the benefit of the stability and further progress of government in the Philippine Islands. It provides that some of the public officials in the Philippine Islands shall still be appointed by the President of the United States, in order that their duties for a time may continue to be performed by Americans appointed by the President. It provides, for instance, that the vice governor shall be appointed by the President of the United States and shall have control over the department of public instruction, that being of such vast interest to the Philippine people and there being such important needs that American standards shall continue in the wonderful development of the educational work now going on there. It provides that sanitation shall still be in the hands of this department; it provides that health shall still be in the control of this department; it provides that the non-Christian tribes shall still be under the jurisdiction of this department.

The bill also provides that the auditor for the Philippine Islands shall be appointed by the President of the United States, and, to some extent, therefore, shall be an independent official and shall audit the accounts of the various departments of the government of the islands, the Philippine Government, the provincial governments, and the municipal governments.

While the powers of legislation generally are bestowed upon the Philippine Legislature, there are certain restrictions upon those powers. The Philippine Legislature can not legislate on subjects of immigration without the approval of the President of the United States; it can not legislate upon the subject of coinage without the specific approval of the President of the United States; it can not legislate upon the subject of the public domain, as affecting the alienation of the public domain, without the approval of the President of the United States. One or two other exceptions there may be, but except for these the whole power of legislation is given to the legislature; and that is the gist of this bill.

The creation of this legislature, the separation of the governor general from the legislative function, giving the veto power, the power of appointment, and the retaining of certain powers still in the hands of American appointees of the President—these, in short, are the provisions of this bill. It is a simple measure; it takes a step toward carrying out the solemn pledge of the Democratic Party in national convention; it takes a step toward carrying out the very definite pledges heretofore made by President Roosevelt, President McKinley, President Taft, Secretary Taft, Gov. Gen. Taft, and every other public official who has had to do with Philippine affairs.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator—and I will do so in just a few words—to tell me to what extent and in what way the Filipinos are granted privileges and liberties of self-government beyond those they now possess? What advance will be made under this bill over the present status?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The chief thing, as I have stated, is that the upper house, instead of being appointed by the President and subject to his control, becomes elective, like the lower house. That is the most important change that is made. It gives to the Philippine people the control of legislation, subject to the veto power or to the qualified veto power of the governor, subject to the veto of the President of the United States, and subject to certain restrictions in a few excepted cases. This bill, for the rest, is merely a reenactment of the organic act, a reenactment of existing law, a continuation of existing conditions.

For many years the municipal governments have been completely in the hands of the Philippine people. The provincial governments have been practically in the hands of the Philippine people, subject to the auditing power of the auditor appointed by the President of the United States, and that is to continue for the purpose of maintaining American standards in the administration of financial matters.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator in what manner, if at all, this proposed measure affects the judicial department of the Philippines as now constituted?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a matter to which I should have referred. As it is now, the President of the United States appoints the judges of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, and I think the Governor General appoints the judges of the courts of first instance. Under this bill the same plan is continued. At the present time a majority of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands consists of Americans, and a minority, by a narrow margin, consists of Filipinos, and upon that court they have, I am told, some able lawyers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I heard the Senator make some quotation from an address by ex-President Taft, either when he was Secretary of War or when he was Governor General of the Philippines, in substance to the effect that in course of time the sovereignty of the United States might come to an end, so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned. Did ex-President Taft testify before the Philippine Committee as to this bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He did; yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, my recollection was, though I am not positive about it—and I ask the Senator for information—that he did not favor before the committee any reference to the independence of the Philippines in this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, that was a good while ago; and I must confess——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it was a year or two ago. I happened to be in the committee room at the time, and my strong impression is that he thought any statement in this bill now relating to ultimate independence of the Philippines very inadvisable; that it would excite hopes that would not be realized, perhaps, and would tend rather not to order but to disorder. Does the Senator remember anything of that kind in the testimony of ex-President Taft?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am unable to recall exactly; and I must confess that I have paid much less attention to advice which President Taft has given in recent years, since he has been disconnected with the Philippine question, than I have paid to these solemn official statements which he made while in the Philippine Islands, occupying a position of authority, and, as far as the Filipinos were concerned, representing the people of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know; but does not the Senator really remember that ex-President Taft did give utterance to some such statement as that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I must confess that I do not recall it exactly. I think I sent the Senator a copy of the proceedings.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It may be so. They are printed, are they?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, yes; they are printed, and I think the Senator has a copy upon his shelf.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is on the shelf if I have one.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has referred to the statement which he read from ex-President Taft as an official statement. Does the Senator, upon reflection, have the opinion that that declaration of the Governor General was an official act?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. It seems to me that the Senator will change his view if he will consider the authority with which the Governor General was vested and which was limited. He had no official authority to promise ultimate independence to the Philippines; and, having no authority, his declaration could not possibly have been anything more than the expression of an individual opinion.

I am not familiar with the testimony of Mr. Taft before the committee, but from what was indicated here in the colloquy a moment ago I apprehend that his objection to placing such a declaration as that in this bill would be based upon that very point, that he objected to an official declaration. There is no objection to anybody expressing his individual view, but Mr. Taft could not have bound the Government of the United States at that time, to say nothing of binding it at some time in the future, by any official utterance as to what action they would take in this connection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood the Senator to give the date upon which that speech was delivered as 1907. Mr. Taft was then Secretary of War and had not been the Governor General of the islands for some three years, I think.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am reading from the testimony of the Secretary of War before the Philippine Committee; and the language which he uses is as follows:

In opening the Philippine Assembly on the 16th of October, 1907, Mr. Taft, then Secretary of War, said—

And so on. Now, he may have been over there at that time——

Mr. CURTIS. He went over for the purpose of opening that session. He was then Secretary of War.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was my impression; so that he really represented officially the President and people of the United States. It seems to me a statement which the Philippine people might have accepted as a conclusive, binding promise from the country which sent him over there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was the great mistake, Mr. President, in making such a declaration—if any such declaration was made—the very fact that they would be inclined to accept it as a binding promise, when it could not have had that nature. It could not have bound anybody at all. Mr. Taft was there, I judge from what has been said, in the capacity of a distinguished visitor from this country to the Philippine Islands, not commissioned to make any declaration to them as to the relations between the United States and the Philippines.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator would hardly make the statement that he was there merely as a distinguished visitor, because the organic act specifically places the administration of affairs in the Philippine Islands under the Secretary of War and gives him a veto power over acts of their legislature; so that he was there in an official capacity, as the supreme executive officer, as far as the Philippine people were concerned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, certainly the Senator would not claim that that gave him the right to declare that they should have their independence at some future time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no legal contract, of course; but I should say that when Secretary Taft said that thing he expressed what was the generally accepted view in the United States; and the people of the Philippine Islands have heard from the United States officially nothing but promises and assurances of that sort. It is to make those assurances concrete and specific and to preserve and continue the peace of the Philippine Islands that this preamble is introduced into this bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Missouri had the floor first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A Senator gets the floor from the Chair. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I wanted to call attention to the record, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. On pages 397 and 398 of the record before the committee is the testimony of ex-President Taft, in which he does state that he is opposed to making any promise at all in the preamble, because it would be misunderstood. Then a colloquy follows, on page 398 of that record, in which he expresses himself very clearly against that preamble.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask if the Senator would not be willing to suspend at this time, so that we may have an executive session and be able to adjourn at 5 o'clock.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be very glad to do so. I have substantially finished. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes over as the unfinished business if the Senate goes into executive session now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand we are going into executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 7, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 6, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for those godlike qualities which Thou hast woven into our being, truth, justice, love, mercy, purity, which in times of great crises, lift us out of ourselves and make the whole world akin, illustrated in the stream of charities and personal sacrifices which are pouring themselves out in relief of the suffering men, women, and children in the war zone. But we pray that greater emphasis may be put upon these qualities in the transactions of daily life after the similitude of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FREEDOM OF THE SEAS.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to prefer a request for unanimous consent. It is very seldom that I ask unanimous consent to insert anything in the RECORD, but I ask now to insert, as a part of my remarks, a very remarkable statement by Dr. Dernberg, upholding the view of the United States on the question of the freedom of the seas from submarine attack.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article written by Dr. Dernberg respecting certain rights on the seas. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state whether he received this communication from Dr. Dernberg direct or is it in the form of a publication?

Mr. BORLAND. This is a publication in a Milwaukee newspaper.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, if it is in a Milwaukee newspaper, it is authority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri if this is the Dr. Dernberg who visited the United States and who is not a citizen of the United States?

Mr. BORLAND. This is the Dr. Bernhard Dernberg who is an expert on international law, as I understand it, and who has been in some capacity connected with the German Government. He was at one time in the United States.

Mr. TAGGART. And has now left the United States?

Mr. BORLAND. He is now in Germany. This is an opinion on international law on the question of the freedom of the seas, which is very valuable and enlightening as being the true German viewpoint on that subject.

Mr. TAGGART. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of farm credits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of farm credits. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman expect to do that by inserting a lot of material or to extend the remarks the gentleman made the other day?

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, the other day I intended to ask that permission. There were several things that I omitted to put into my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COTTON.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of cotton and the marketing thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of cotton and the marketing thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a copy of a telegram I received from Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, of Kansas, on the subject of national defense, and a copy of my answer thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a telegram he received from Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, and his answer to the same, on the subject of preparedness. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see here present the chairman of the Committee on Printing, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], who usually takes charge of these outside requests, and for the time being I shall object.

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the consideration of the bill (H. R. 562) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. As the Chair recollects, when this bill was withdrawn from consideration temporarily before the holidays, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] were endeavoring to reach some agreement respecting the time for debate.

Mr. MANN. No, Mr. Speaker; the consent had already been given to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MOON. Yes; and the date for consideration was fixed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I take it that there is not very much controversy about this bill. Possibly there should be some little change in the phraseology.

Mr. MANN. I think the bill was read for amendment. I move to strike out the last word. As I understand, the language of the bill is:

And said act is further amended so as to repeal the proviso in section 7 thereof and insert in lieu of such proviso the following.

I suppose that would accomplish the purpose, although it seems to me a little irregular to say that we amend an act by repealing a part of it. I suggest that it read as follows:

And said act is further amended so that the proviso in section 7 thereof shall read as follows.

That is the ordinary form.

Mr. MOON. The phraseology offered by the gentleman from Illinois does not in any sense change the meaning of the bill.

Mr. MANN. No; it leaves it identically the same, but, I think, in better language.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 10, the words "as to repeal" and insert in lieu of these words the word "that," and then strike out, in lines 11 and 12, the language "and insert in lieu of such proviso the following," and insert "shall read as follows:" I will ask the Clerk to read the language as it will read as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

And said act is further amended so that the proviso in section 7 thereof shall read as follows:

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask recognition for a pro forma amendment.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I purposed to offer an amendment to this bill which would lift the restriction entirely on the amount that could be deposited in postal savings banks and limit the amount to $2,000 on which interest would be paid; but I recognize the difficulty that might beset this bill even though a majority of this House were in favor of that liberal policy, for this bill in the last Congress had rather rough sledding in another body. We brought into the House, in the early days of the last Congress, a bill lifting the present limitation of $500 which a person could deposit in a postal savings bank to $1,000, and removed the restriction of $100 that might be deposited in any one month. It went to another body, and after a long siege over there it was brought back in a somewhat emasculated form, and the conference report was agreed to, only to be vetoed by the President of the United States in September, 1914.

It was the expectation of many that some action might be taken on this important measure following the veto of the President, but regardless of the mandate of the Constitution which requires immediate consideration of a veto it was referred to the Post Office Committee and allowed to slumber there until the end of the session. Since adjournment, and even before adjournment, there has been a demand in all of the large cities of the country, by reason of the tremulous condition confronting the financial situation at times, from poor people, and particularly foreigners who have not sufficient faith and confidence in our financial institutions, to present their savings at post-office depositories in greater sums than $100.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at this point. In a minute I will be glad to yield. But the post offices of the country have been unable to accept those funds. In fact, those who were in strong favor of the Postal Savings System in its very inauguration back in 1912 were opposed to that $100 restriction and favored allowing a depositor to deposit the maximum amount at one time. Any of you gentlemen who are acquainted with the practice of receiving these funds know that foreigners come to the cashiers of the post offices with large sums, wishing to have them deposited, but can not have them accepted. This bill lifts that $500 and permits a maximum amount of $1,000 to be deposited at one time. It also grants to the board of trustees the privilege of allowing an additional sum of $1,000 to be deposited, but without interest. The reason why I am not going to press my amendment is this: That with the liberal policy of allowing any depositor at any one time to deposit $1,000 in a postal bank he may at the end of the quarterly period transfer his deposit to a postal savings bond paying 2½ per cent, and by that means will be able to deposit all the savings that he may have in permanent form with the security of the Government back of it, thus taking out of hiding these thousands and thousands of dollars that have been in hiding for years and years, mayhap, and allowing those funds to be utilized in the course of business. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not true, I will ask the gentleman, not only in the larger cities, as the gentleman stated, but in the smaller cities and towns, where they may have a large foreign element of population, that the demand is also coming for this enlargement of the restriction?

Mr. STAFFORD. In all localities where there is a large foreign element the statistics show there has been a demand to ultilize the postal savings banks. In fact, nearly 60 per cent of all the depositors of postal savings funds come from the foreign element of the country. Therefore I will not press my amendment, but will favor the bill as it stands, hoping it will be agreed to speedily in another body.

I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HOWARD. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I consider this, in view of proposed rural-credits legislation that I hope will be enacted into law at this session of Congress, one of the most important measures that are pending before the House.

The present conduct of the Postal Savings System of this Government, as anybody knows who has devoted any time whatever to the study of the system, is a monumental farce. It is unwieldy, in the first place; it is exorbitantly expensive in another; and there are certain limitations and restrictions thrown around the present system that, in my judgment, are absolutely absurd. This system has been in operation since 1910. The annual appropriation made for the maintenance of the Postal Savings System has been $600,000 per annum. We had at the beginning of the European war about $43,000,000 on deposit, after this bank had been in operation for about four years. At the present time we have, according to the statement of the Third Assistant Postmaster General, $73,000,000 on deposit. The reason for this enormous and extensive increase in the deposits of the Postal Savings System occurs for two reasons—first, the inability of foreign citizens in this country to get their savings to their people in Europe; next, the very high cost of exchanges to European countries. I predict—and any other man who has given any study to this question will agree with me—that as soon as the European war is over all of this surplus that the Postal Savings System, or practically all of it, that has accumulated will be withdrawn immediately and it will be sent abroad to the relatives and close kin of these foreigners who have deposited it. Now, if you will take $45,000,000 from $73,000,000, you will get approximately the amount of money that is sent abroad every year by foreigners who come over here to compete with our American-born labor.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. In just one second I will. I want to finish this.

Now, I saw a very interesting statement in the New York Times about the savings banks in this country. If you will take the number of offices, some 14,000, out of the number of post offices in the United States you will find the sum deposited in the offices that the Post Office Department has authorized to receive these deposits is a mere bagatelle. I hope, and I shall offer a substitute to this bill for that purpose, that the postal savings in this country may become a very strong arm of our system of rural credits for the purpose of stabilizing rural-credit bonds issued on farm-loan securities.

Now, let us see. In 1915, at the end of the year, we had 2,100 savings banks in the United States. The number of savings depositors in these private institutions were 10,502,000. The amount of savings-bank deposits, approximately, on the 31st day of December, 1915, was $4,700,000,000. The number of mutual savings banks out of the 2,100 stock companies and mutual companies in the United States——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWARD. The number of purely mutual savings institutions in the United States was 634. Now, here is a remarkable fact that I would like you gentlemen to think about. The number of depositors in the mutual savings banks, without any stipulated capital whatever, but purely mutual organizations, amounted to 8,274,000 out of a total number of depositors of all savings banks of 10,502,000. The deposits in purely mutual savings banks, to wit, 634 of them, amount to $3,924,000,000; or, in fact, four-fifths of the entire deposits and savings institutions in the United States were in these 634 banks.

Now, let me explain to you the inner workings of this system. Suppose my friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] went down to the post office here and deposited $100, and that his business called him to Chicago, where he would have need for his $100. You would think, and any other sane man would think, that if he stepped into a bank or the post office to get $100 on certificate of the Government of the United States, that they hold in trust for him $100. But that is not the operation of this system. The gentleman from Iowa would have to go to a lawyer, draw a power of attorney, designate a certain person in the city of Washington, D. C., to collect that money, and that person would have to be identified at the local office here. Suppose his interest fell due, which would amount to $2, and he wanted to collect that from Chicago, he would have to go through the same operation. Suppose you wanted to deposit $18 of your hard-earned savings in this system, and you went down to complete that transaction in the city of Washington. The clerk would first say to you, "What is your age?" "What was the name of your father?" "What was the name of your mother?" "What is the color of your eyes?" "What is the color of your hair; and how much do you weigh; and what did you have for breakfast this morning?" In addition to that, you say, "I want this $18 deposited." He issues you four pieces of paper—a $10 certificate, a $5 certificate, a $2 certificate, and a $1 certificate. The poor fellow gets back more from the Government than he gave it. He gets a handful of certificates, a pass book, an identification card. But suppose he had $18.60 that he wanted to deposit. In that case, they would hand you a beautiful post card, with six beautiful blue stamps on it, and that would make $18.60 you have deposited, and in addition you have a handful of paper. The wonder to me is that you found 40 per cent of sane American citizens that would put 40 per cent of the deposits in these banks under the present system. No wonder, as my good friend from Wisconsin stated, that 60 per cent of their depositors are foreigners. An American citizen will not deposit money in these banks as long as these limitations and restrictions are put around them. Why should not the United States of America at this minute have on deposit, if these banks were established in every post office in the United States, between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000? For what purpose does the Government of the United States establish a Postal Savings System? Did it establish it for the purpose of going into competition with savings banks? Not at all.

The purpose of the establishment of the Postal Savings System was for drawing from hiding, from skeptical people, who would rather put their money in an old sock, under the hearthstone, or between the mattresses of the bed than in an ordinary private savings institution, the hidden money of the country. After gathering these vast sums together putting it back into the legitimate channels of commerce. But since the enactment of this law—and wisely, too, the necessity having arisen—we want to establish a system of rural credits. You want the credit of the farmer to be worth one hundred cents on the dollar, and upon the same principle that all stocks in which savings bank deposits can be invested in this country you never find one of them below par. Why? Because the mere fact that savings banks can invest their capital and deposits in these securities stabilizes these securities, and every great financier in the country always is endeavoring to make his securities come within the purview of the law governing the investment of savings-bank funds. So in like manner would the permission to invest postal savings in rural credit securities stabilize them and they would always sell at par.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is withdrawn.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] recognized?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] did not seem to grasp the significance of this bill. He seemed to try to surround the bill with every kind of complication and nightmare that he could imagine.

This is the simplest proposition that has been before the House for a number of years. Under the law at the present time any person who wishes to deposit in a postal savings bank can deposit only $100 in any one month, and he can deposit only $500 altogether. This bill proposes to change that limitation. It proposes to enable any person who wishes to do so to deposit not only $100 in any one month but $1,000 or $2,000, if you please. To-day we pay interest only on $500. If this bill passes, the depositor can have $2,000 in the bank on $1,000 of which he can draw interest.

That is all there is in the bill. It is simply an effort to accommodate the public, or that part of the public that wishes to take advantage of an increased right to deposit money in the postal savings banks. It has nothing to do with rural credits, nothing to do with the complications of management. It simply adds to the opportunity of increased deposits. That is all.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Can you please give any reason why the Government of the United States should limit the amount of money upon which it will pay interest or limit the amount of money that could be deposited in a postal savings bank?

Mr. MADDEN. Only the reason that it is believed there ought not to be too much money placed at the disposal of the Government of the United States through these deposits. When the law was originally enacted it was sought to leave the bill without limitation as to the amount of deposits, but a great many Members of the House and of the Senate—a majority, at least—believed that there ought to be a limitation, and it is not for me to say that what the House and the Senate did was unwise. I believed then that there ought not to be any limitation; I believe now that there ought not to be any; but I believe that what we propose is infinitely better than what we have.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Then the gentleman practically admits that the purpose of this amendment and all other amendments that have been put upon this Postal Savings System is to smother rather than to increase deposits?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I deny that. This amendment is proposed for the purpose of encouraging larger deposits, for the purpose of bringing more money out of hiding, for the purpose of enabling men who have no confidence in banks to deposit their money with the Government, and most people who wish to deposit money in this kind of a bank do not wish to deposit in any large sums, as a rule. There are times when banks in various localities may fail. The people who are not in the habit of conducting business through banks and transacting business by check take their money out of the banks and endeavor to place it on deposit in the postal savings banks. The bankers of the country originally believed that this system would be antagonistic to banking. They have now come to the belief that this is a supplement to good banking, and the more money we place in the postal-savings banks of the United States the more stable the banks of the country are, because all the money that goes into the postal-savings banks finds its way into the local banks, which are obliged to pay interest to the Government of the United States and to give security for the safe return of the money which is placed on deposit with them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is there any limitation as to what sort of post office or as to the character of the town where the postal savings bank is established?

Mr. MADDEN. The commission or the board, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General and, I believe, the Secretary of Agriculture, has power to designate the character of the post office in which the postal savings bank can be established.

Mr. FESS. Does this answer where there is no bank in the town?

Mr. MADDEN. Where there is no bank in the town, as a rule, there would be no postal savings bank, because the law requires that all money placed on deposit in the postal savings banks must be redeposited in the local banks.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is withdrawn.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, there ought not to be very much controversy about this bill. It is a very simple amendment to the postal savings banks law that has been in operation for several years. Under the law, as it stands now, $100 may be deposited in one month. Five hundred dollars is the limit to one person for a year. This bill proposes to permit the deposit of $1,000 in a year with interest, and $1,000 additional, in the discretion of the trustees, without interest, making $2,000 deposits possible.

As has been stated time and time again, those deposits come largely from foreigners and persons who are not willing to trust our banks. I had thought when this system began that it would not be profitable, but it seems its operation has disclosed the fact that it does make, even with the present limitations imposed on it, some profit to the Government, and it is running not with an increased but with a decreased expense from the maximum obtained in 1913. The expenses of running this department for 1914 were $205,528.32; for 1915, $168,953.64. The estimate for the coming year is $161,120. The department is reducing its expenses as it understands the proper methods by which it may be better run year by year. Let me read to you these figures:

Statement showing the number of depositors in the Postal Savings System and the balances to their credit at the end of each fiscal year during which the system has been in existence, together with the number of officers and clerks employed at the central office of the system at the end of each fiscal year and the aggregate salaries paid the officers and clerks during each fiscal year.

[1] Six months only; system began business Jan. 3, 1911.

The Postmaster General's estimate for clerical hire in the central office of the Postal Savings System for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, is $161,120.

There are now $73,000,000 on deposit. Last year there were $32,000,000 in State institutions and trust companies that are not really members of the reserve-bank system and $41,000,000 in the national banks, as I am advised. I present here some facts from the department, as follows:

THE POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM.

Authorized: By the act of June 25, 1910; installed January 3, 1911. (All statistics are of June 30, 1915, unless otherwise described.)

Deposits: $65,684,708, a gain over the previous year of more than $22,000,000; largest gain in the history of the service.

Number of depositors: 525,414, an increase of 137,000 over the previous year; also largest increase in the history of the service.

November 30 estimates: Amount on deposit, $73,000,000; number of depositors, 560,000.

Banks, depository: All postal savings funds are on deposit in 3,625 national and 2,291 State institutions, except 5 per cent required by law to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as a reserve fund and $1,233,420 postal savings bonds bought from the public by the board of trustees.

Bonds: Postal savings bonds (1 to 20 years, 2½ per cent) issued pursuant to section 10 of the postal savings act, $7,307,100. All outstanding except the $1,233,420 purchased from the public by the board of trustees.

Excess of interest: Excess of interest received from banks over interest allowed depositors covered into the Treasury since the beginning of the service, $1,687,912.08. Payments to the Treasury were as follows:

June 29, 1914	$399,932.96
Oct. 13, 1914	425,684.72
Dec. 18, 1914	225,000.00
June 16, 1915	375,000.00
July 27, 1915	12,294.40
Dec. 1, 1915	250,000.00

The payments to the Treasurer for the fiscal years 1915 and 1916 have necessarily been on account and are not complete.

Net profits: In the early days of the service, when the central office was being equipped at great expense, the field stocked with records, blanks, and other supplies, and the deposits were comparatively small, the service was run at a loss to the Government. Experience pointed out many economies, so that during the fiscal year 1914 the Postal Savings Service, for the first time, was conducted at a profit—$172,421.67. Further economies and larger deposits in 1915 resulted in a net profit of $421,028.44.

Class of depositors: Postal savings deposits are made up chiefly of the savings of people who work for a daily wage. While every conceivable occupation is represented among the depositors, the day-labor class far outnumbers all others and owns a vast majority of the savings. A very large percentage of these day laborers is foreign born, who will patronize no savings institution that does not have the Government directly back of it.

Fifty-nine per cent of all postal savings depositors were born outside of the United States, and they own 72 per cent of all the money on deposit. The Russians outstrip other foreign born in deposits, with 20.7 per cent of all postal savings deposits to their credit. The Italians are next, with 14.2 per cent. Natives of Great Britain and her colonies rank third, with 8.8 per cent. Then follow the Austrians, with 8.7 per cent; Hungarians, 4.3 per cent; Germans, 4.1 per cent; Swedes, 2.2 per cent; and Greeks, 1.8 per cent. A score of other nationalities from every quarter of the globe own 7 per cent of the deposits. These figures explain enormous postal savings receipts in the large manufacturing cities.

Leading States and cities: The bulk of postal savings deposits is in comparatively few States. On September 30, 16 States named below had 86 per cent of all deposits in the United States:

New York	$21,186,916
Illinois	5,098,146
Pennsylvania	4,700,112
Ohio	4,546,699
California	3,772,053
Massachusetts	3,188,284
Michigan	2,429,744
New Jersey	2,166,001
Washington	2,009,403
Minnesota	1,840,492
Missouri	1,827,569
Oregon	1,535,019
Wisconsin	1,510,543
Colorado	1,415,777
Connecticut	1,242,222
Indiana	1,166,410

Further segregation of postal savings in these States shows the following:

New York: Ninety per cent of the deposits is in New York City, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Rochester, and Long Island City. (Over one-fourth of all the deposits in the United States is in post offices included in Greater New York.)

Illinois: Two-thirds of the deposits are in Chicago.

Pennsylvania: Thirty-nine per cent of the deposits is in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Erie, and Altoona. Outside of these cities the deposits are heaviest in the mining belts where foreign labor predominates.

Ohio: Sixty-one per cent of the deposits is in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo, Akron, and Dayton.

California: Sixty-one per cent of the deposits is in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Oakland, and San Diego.

Massachusetts: Sixty-two per cent of the deposits is in Boston, Lowell, and Lawrence.

Michigan: Sixty per cent of the deposits is in Detroit and Ironwood.

New Jersey: Forty-five per cent of the deposits is in Newark, Jersey City, Paterson, and Franklin.

Washington: Sixty-three per cent of the deposits is in Seattle, Tacoma, Bellingham, Aberdeen, Spokane, and Roslyn.

Minnesota: Seventy per cent of the deposits is in St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Duluth.

Missouri: Seventy-six per cent of the deposits is in Kansas City and St. Louis.

Oregon: Seventy-six per cent of the deposits is in Portland and Astoria.

Wisconsin: Fifty-six per cent of the deposits is in Milwaukee and Superior.

Colorado: Sixty per cent of the deposits is in Denver, Leadville, and Pueblo.

Connecticut: Thirty-nine per cent of the deposits is in Bridgeport, New Haven, and Hartford.

Indiana: Twenty-five per cent of the deposits is in Indianapolis and Gary.

On September 30, 64 per cent of all postal savings deposits in the United States were held in 64 post offices.

Limits handicap: The Postal Savings Service has been handicapped from the very beginning by the statutory restrictions on the amount that may be accepted from a depositor. Only $100 may be accepted from a depositor in a month, and $500, exclusive of accumulated interest, is the maximum amount he may have on deposit. Millions of dollars, tendered chiefly by the foreign born, have been rejected and driven back into hiding and disuse on account of these restrictions. Not a day passes that postmasters do not report instances of the rejection of hidden savings. More than 30,000 depositors have now reached the $500 limit and can deposit no more, despite their appeals to do so. Of these inactive accounts, which aggregate one-fifth of all postal savings deposits, 22,000 are owned by the foreign born. The Post Office Department, as now organized and equipped, could attend to the business incident to much larger deposits with practically no additional expense.

Postmasters complain: Attached are excerpts from a few letters received since the adjournment of the last Congress, in which postmasters volunteer their views on the statutory limitations on postal savings deposits.

Federal reserve system and postal savings: No postal savings funds have been deposited in banks which are not members of the Federal reserve system since November 15, 1914, when the Federal reserve act went into effect, because section 15 of that act prohibits the deposit of postal savings in nonmember banks. Postal savings deposited previous to November 15 in nonmember banks have been allowed to remain, under a ruling of the Attorney General, except as it has been necessary to withdraw them in isolated cases to meet withdrawals by depositors.

Postal savings funds in banks: On September 30, State banks and trust companies not members of the Federal reserve system held $23,100,000 of postal savings. State banks and trust companies which have joined the Federal reserve system held $1,200,000 and national banks $41,300,000.

Collateral deposited by banks: Any bank belonging to the Federal reserve system which desires postal savings deposits must first turn over to the Treasurer of the United States acceptable collateral to guarantee the payment of funds on demand. There are approximately 7,600 national banks in the country, but only 3,625 have qualified to receive postal savings deposits.

State banks will not suffer if limit is raised: Under the present law State banks and trust companies not members of the Federal reserve system can not receive additional postal savings deposits. If the limit on deposits is raised, member banks will necessarily get a larger amount of money, but this will not be at the expense of the State banks.

Bankers are satisfied with this bill: A special committee of the savings-bank section of the American Bankers' Association has considered a bill identical with this and has reported that the increase in deposits asked is not unreasonable and will not work hardship upon their savings banks.

Minors: There is no valid reason why different limits should be placed on the amounts that will be accepted from minors and adults. More than a million and a half postal savings accounts, including those of present depositors, have been opened since the service went into effect, and there never has been a complaint to the Post Office Department that a dishonest debtor has caused accounts to be opened in the names of his children to evade his creditors. Of course, no statute can make a tax dodger or a dishonest debtor come up to the mark.

Minors should be given every opportunity during their habit-forming years to save their earnings. According to the census of 1910, one-fifth of all the gainful workers—that is, people who were working for wages—were between the ages of 10 and 20 years. In other words, 7,453,448 boys and girls between the ages of 10 and 20 in the United States were working for wages. The question of discriminating against them in the matter of accepting postal savings deposits is a serious one.

Having a different standard for deposits for minors and adults would entail serious administrative difficulties. Two sets of records would necessarily have to be kept. In 20 of the States a girl attains her majority at 18, so that boys would be required to wait three years in those States to patronize the Postal Savings System as fully as girls are permitted to do.

Cost of the postal savings service: Deposits and profits of the service are running up constantly and operating expenses are falling off. (See table.) The Post Office Department is equipped to transact double the present postal savings business with comparatively little additional outlay.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. It has escaped my mind for the moment what the rule is with reference to the deposit of these funds in banks by the Post Office Department. Does the rule obtain that the funds may be deposited in another town, even though there are solvent State and National banks in the town in which the original deposit was made?

Mr. MOON. It is a matter that is in the discretion of the department to designate the depository. There are about 7,600 national banks in the United States that may be designated, but, as a matter of fact, only about 3,600 are.

Mr. WINGO. Can the gentleman advise me, is the basis upon which the department makes the discrimination of taking the deposits from town A, where there is both a State bank and a national bank, and sends them to a national bank in town B, a bank that is no stronger in assets?

Mr. MOON. I, of course, could not explain to the gentleman the reason why the department, in the performance of its administrative duties, sees fit to make a discrimination of that kind.

Mr. WINGO. I did not know but that the hearings disclosed the reason for that.

Mr. MOON. Nothing was disclosed on that point. I take it merely that the department thought that it was to the best interests of the department and the security of the funds to place them somewhere else.

Mr. WINGO. In the case I had in mind there was no question at all about the security, because there was no question about the solvency of both the State and the National banks.

Mr. MOON. Those are matters that are always in the discretion of an administrative officer.

Mr. WINGO. What I am seeking information about is, why it was done.

Mr. MOON. We have no information about that. Of course, that may be an isolated case.

Mr. WINGO. It was some time ago—I think possibly two years ago—that the same question was asked me and I was unable to give the information sought.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, the demand for this bill comes from every State in the Union. The postmasters are asking that something be done to authorize them to receive more deposits than they are now entitled to receive under the law. If under the present restrictions this bill is producing a revenue to the Government and placing money in commercial activity that has heretofore been in hiding, and bringing it out to be used at a low rate of interest, it is certainly a benefit to the people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. So if it operates well and is efficient and does good service with the restrictions resting upon it, surely it would do better if the restrictions were removed to the extent that the Government asks that they be removed.

I can not conceive of any reason why there should be any opposition to this. Of course, I understand my good friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], who says he is going to propose an amendment that would revolutionize the whole system and give the farmers something that he thinks they ought to have, would be glad to have his measure made the law instead of the present law; but I take it he knows, as I do, that his amendment will not be germane to this bill; and, however wise it may be, it can not be considered under this bill under the House rules.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman explain to the House why the committee limited the amount to be deposited to $2,000?

Mr. MOON. I can not explain to the gentleman why there should be any limit on it at all; but the department is moving slowly in the development of this system. It has operated some time under the low limit, and now its desire is to try to the higher limit. I take it that it is possible that it would be all right to withdraw the restriction altogether, but I should not favor that, in view of the expressed opinion of the department of a preference for the limit as fixed in this bill. Of course $2,000 is an arbitrary figure.

Mr. NORTON. The $2,000 is an arbitrary limitation.

Mr. MOON. Yes; and it is believed by the department that this figure will cover the amount of deposits that will be sought to be made, so far as present information is concerned.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. MOON. I will yield.

Mr. BENNET. Does the bill in its present form meet the objections raised by the President of the United States to the former bill?

Mr. MOON. Yes; the President of the United States vetoed the other bill because there was a provision in it which directed deposits to be made with State banks and trust companies. The President thought that all Federal revenue should be under the control of a bank which itself was under the control of the Federal Government, but this bill does not contain the provision that was vetoed.

The President commended the bill very much, except the one provision which he thought was unwise to incorporate into the law.

Now, as I was about to say when I was interrupted, my good friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] has one objection to this bill. He thinks that minors ought not to be permitted to deposit money in the postal savings bank. Having so much respect for the judgment of my friend generally, I have tried to find some reason why that sort of an objection should be made to this bill. I can not see any reason why a boy or girl who is working for a living, although under 21 years of age, should not be encouraged to make deposits of savings as well as grown persons. There can not be any sound reason against it. In fact, a policy which will encourage the saving of what they make ought to be encouraged. But the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] says that a case might arise where a parent would have children take his money and deposit it in their names, and thereby defraud his creditors. It is inconceivable to my mind that this Congress should legislate against the possibility of dishonesty on the part of any man, either to circumvent the law or attempt to defraud his creditors. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that while such a case is altogether theoretical, up to this time there has not been the suggestion of any fraud of that kind. If it did arise it would be the easiest thing possible to protect creditors against the fraud. All that a creditor would have to do would be to file a bill for an injunction against the parties perpetrating the fraud. He could not file it against the Government, but he could file it against them, and they would be prohibited from withdrawing a dollar of that fund until the decision was made. Then if the decision was against the defendant and on behalf of the plaintiff-creditor the gentleman very well knows that the Government of the United States would not pay out the money to the depositor in the face of such judicial decision that it was fraudulently deposited. So it occurs to me that there can be absolutely nothing in that view of the case. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are others who want to address the House on this question I will yield, and if not, I will move the previous question.

Mr. STEENERSON was recognized.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask what the status is as to offering an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can offer it after the other amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HOWARD. After the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER. No.

Hr. HOWARD. But the gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question.

Mr. MOON. Oh, no; I stated that if there were no other Members who wished to address the House I would move the previous question.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to ask recognition to offer a substitute for the pending bill.

Mr. MANN. It is in order at any time, and the gentleman can do it now.

Mr. STEENERSON. But, Mr. Speaker, I have been recognized and I want to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Minnesota is through, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia to offer his substitute.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by adding at the end of the paragraph on page 2 the following:

"That section 9 of the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 9. That postal savings funds received under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in solvent banks, whether organized under National or State laws, and whether member banks or not of a reserve bank created by the Federal reserve act, approved December 23, 1913, being subject to National or State supervision and examination, and the sums deposited shall bear interest at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum, which rate shall be uniform throughout the United States and Territories thereof; but 5 per cent of such funds shall be withdrawn by the board of trustees and kept with the Treasurer of the United States, who shall be treasurer of the board of trustees, in lawful money as a reserve. The board of trustees shall take from such banks such security in public bonds or other securities, supported by the taxing power, as the board may prescribe, approve, and deem sufficient and necessary to insure the safety and prompt payment of such deposits on demand. The funds received at the postal savings depository offices in each city, town, village, and other locality shall be deposited in banks located therein (substantially in proportion to the capital and surplus of each such bank) willing to receive such deposits under the terms of this act and the regulations made by authority thereof, but the amount deposited in any one bank shall at no time exceed the amount of the paid-in capital and one-half the surplus of such bank. If no such bank exist in any city, town, village, or locality, or if none where such deposits are made will receive such deposits on the terms prescribed, then such funds shall be deposited under the terms of this act in the bank most convenient to such locality. If no such bank in any State or Territory is willing to receive such deposits on the terms prescribed, then the same shall be deposited with the treasurer of the board of trustees and shall be counted in making up the reserve of 5 per cent. Such funds may be withdrawn from the treasurer of said board of trustees, and all other postal savings funds, or any part of such funds, may be at any time withdrawn from banks and savings depository offices for the repayment of postal savings depositors when required for that purpose. When, in the judgment of the President, war or other exigency involving the credit of the United States so requires, the board of trustees may invest all or any part of the postal savings funds, except the reserve fund of 5 per cent herein provided for, in bonds or other securities of the United States. The board of trustees may in its discretion purchase from the holders thereof bonds which have been or may be issued under the provisions of section 10 of the act of June 25, 1910. Interest and profit accruing from the deposits or investment of postal savings funds shall be applied to the payment of interest due to postal savings depositors as hereinbefore provided, and the excess thereof, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a part of the postal revenue: Provided, That postal savings funds in the treasury of said board shall be subject to disposition as provided in this act, and not otherwise: Provided further, That the board of trustees may at any time dispose of bonds held as postal savings investments and use the proceeds to meet withdrawals of deposits by depositors. For the purposes of this act the word "Territory," as used herein, shall be held to include the District of Columbia, the District of Alaska, and Porto Rico, and the word "bank" shall be held to include savings banks and trust companies doing a banking business.'"

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is exactly the same as section 2 of the bill that passed last Congress and which was vetoed by the President. If this amendment is adopted, the bill will be exactly the same as the bill that we passed in the last Congress, with the exception that the limitation will be $1,000 with interest and an additional thousand and no interest instead of $500.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the grounds upon which the former bill was vetoed. We all favored that bill. One of its provisions was that the postal savings funds might be deposited in State banks without regard to whether or not they were members of the Federal reserve system. It was in that respect in conflict with the reserve law. The President at the request, as we believe, of the Secretary of the Treasury, was induced to veto it. The grounds expressed in the veto were that we had just then created a Federal reserve system and they wanted all the State banks to join, and they wanted to hold out all the inducements possible for those State banks to join. They wanted the additional inducement that postal savings funds should be placed in banks that were members of the reserve system.

The Federal reserve act has been in force for more than a year. If the Federal reserve act had been carried out, you will readily see that postal savings funds in State banks that were not members of the system would have been withdrawn. As suggested by my friend from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, when the bill was up the other day, the carrying out of the reserve law might in some cases cause the withdrawal of millions of dollars from State banks and embarrass them. It is a pretty serious matter. There are now $73,000,000 on deposit, and more than half, I believe, of those deposits are in State banks not members of the Federal reserve system. It is in the power of the Government to change these deposits immediately in compliance with the Federal reserve law.

Now, it is true that the trustees of the Postal Savings System have not exercised any such authority. They have permitted the deposits to continue in the State banks even though they are not members of the Federal reserve system. But that very fact—the fact that for more than a year they have not enforced the law in that regard—is proof, it seems to me, that the ground upon which that bill was vetoed was untenable and is not valid now, and would not again be taken by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The idea of the Postal Savings System was, as expressed so eloquently by those gentlemen who have preceded me, to induce money to leave its hiding places, especially among the laborers who did not like to trust their money to the banks, and to put it at work in commerce and industry. But it ought to be put to work—and that was the idea and the object—right in the same locality where it originated, and not be carried away to distant banks or to Washington. For that reason, when the Postal Savings System was before Congress——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may continue for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that his time be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. When the Postal Savings System was before Congress it was provided that these funds might be deposited—and, in fact, required to be deposited—in the banks nearest the origin of the deposits.

There is another reason why the objection raised in the veto of the former measure now loses its force. When they deposit postal savings funds in State or National banks they require security—bonds, public bonds, or other securities supported by the taxing power, as the board of trustees may prescribe. In that particular the United States Government is acting as trustee for the savings-banks funds, and those funds have an advantage over all other deposits, because no other depositor gets actual security hypothecated for the return of the money.

Therefore the reason advanced why these funds should be deposited only in National banks or such State banks as are under the Federal reserve system, and thereby under supervision of the national authorities, is removed, because the Government has absolutely passed upon the bonds or securities that have been left with the authorities in order to get these deposits. It is not a deposit that is based on the general credit of the bank, only to a very slight degree. This matter was being considered by the committee on postal savings-bank legislation of the savings-bank section of the American Bankers' Association at a session of the annual meeting of the American Bankers' Association on September 7, 1915. I will read the report which that committee made. It reviews the reasons. While this report may be said to favor the measure, it prefers the measure that authorizes the deposit of these funds in other than system banks. I read:

The Sixty-third Congress made no change of moment affecting the Postal Savings System excepting that nonmember banks were disqualified under the Federal reserve law from hereafter becoming depositories of postal savings funds; funds already on deposit in such nonmember banks may or may not be allowed to remain, the present policy of the department being to leave these old deposits undisturbed.

That is the policy of the department. It is not obligatory on them to do so. They have the power, as I have already stated, to take them all out within 24 hours and put them in system banks. To continue with the report:

When we met in Richmond last October we reported that the President had just vetoed the bill known as the Moon bill (H. R. 7907). This bill at first proposed to amend the existing law by permitting a person to deposit an unlimited amount at any time in a postal savings bank, but no interest was to be allowed on sums exceeding $1,000. The bill was subsequently amended in the Senate and the limit of interest-bearing deposits was at first fixed at $1,000 and gave the board of trustees of the Postal Savings System discretionary power to receive an additional $1,000 without interest. As finally passed, the limit was fixed at $500 upon which interest should be paid and an additional $500, at the discretion of the trustees, but without interest. The bill as passed also provided that postal savings funds might be deposited in banks which were not members of the Federal Reserve Association. I will say at this point that considerable complaint has been made to this committee by reason of the fact that the present law does not permit postal savings-bank deposits to be made in nonmembers of the Federal reserve, but that the present policy of the department is to allow deposits to remain undisturbed which were made before the law went into effect with such nonmember banks.

I call attention to the fact that that policy is alleged here to apply only to deposits that were made before the passage of the reserve act. Deposits made since then would have to be deposited in reserve banks. The rest of the letter follows:

I might say that we are endeavoring very hard to have legislation passed to permit the deposit of postal savings funds in any solvent bank, whether member of the Federal reserve or not; but we have been unable utterly to obtain any favorable legislation.

This latter provision was not acceptable to the President and the bill was vetoed. Another bill was promptly introduced by Mr. MOON (H. R. 18842) meeting the President's objection; this bill died in committee. A similar bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator BANKHEAD (S. 6770) fixing the limit at $1,000 upon which interest should be paid and an additional $1,000 without interest; this bill was not reported out of the committee to which it was referred, but was a little later on inserted as a rider in the Post Office appropriation bill; it was finally eliminated from this bill, as the committee wisely decided to exclude all matters not strictly items of appropriation.

The limitation of $500 therefore still exists, but it is understood that the Sixty-fourth Congress will enact legislation raising the limit of interest-bearing deposits to $1,000 and giving discretionary powers to the board of trustees to accept an additional $1,000 without interest. From the knowledge acquired by your committee in its efforts to have the original bill amended and from a frank interchange of views with the director of the Pistal Savings System, we feel that the desire of the trustees for this increase of authority is not unreasonable and will not work any hardship upon our savings banks. We have been assured that it is not the policy of the Postal Savings System to compete with the existing agencies for saving, but endeavors only to supplement them, and in so far as we are able our members should cooperate with every effort to cultivate the thrift habit of our people.

Owing in great measure to conditions brought about by the war in Europe deposits in postal savings banks have largely increased during the past year; on June 30, 1914, there were 388,511 depositors, and a total of $43,444,271 on deposit; on June 30, 1915, there were 528,000 depositors, and a total of $65,600,000 on deposit, an increase of 36 per cent in the number of depositors and of 51 per cent in total deposits; some of this increase, however, is due to the progressive administration of the system in exploiting the banking-by-mail idea and in securing the cooperation of other governmental agencies in the gratuitous distribution of postal savings bank literature.

Complaint has been made to this committee also that some injury has been done under the law by the solicitation and exploitation of the benefits of the Postal Savings Bank System. Some object to that solicitation; but after consultation with some of the gentlemen connected with our general work, we felt it would be unwise and hardly fair to object in the name of the association to this method of exploiting the postal savings banks law, inasmuch as we feel that our own interests will not thereby be disturbed. These methods, through drawing public attention to the subject of saving and in thus accenting the importance of thrift, are helpful means of promoting the cause for which this section stands, and in the opinion of your committee have not wrought any damage to our members.

However, we must at all times keep a watchful eye upon the constantly recurring efforts to amend the postal savings law. We should be broad enough to cooperate in making any changes for the common good, but should carefully guard the interests we represent from governmental encroachment.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD L. ROBINSON,
B. F. SAUL,
WM. E. KNOX,
Committee.

(Mr. Edward L. Robinson is the vice president of the Eutaw Savings Bank, of Baltimore, Md.; Mr. B. F. Saul, president of the Home Savings Bank, Washington, D. C.; and Mr. William E. Knox, comptroller of the Bowery Savings Bank, New York City.)

On the whole, this is favorable to the increase of the limit, but it is strongly in favor of the provision that these funds may be deposited in State banks. As I have said, it appears to me, and I submit to the House, that it would be advisable to pass this bill in the form substantially that it was passed by the last Congress and give the President and the Secretary of the Treasury opportunity to again consider it. They ought to reconsider it, because, as I say, in the first place, it confers a dangerous authority to withdraw millions and millions of dollars from State banks now, and perhaps would be regarded as a direction to that effect if we act favorably on this bill. In the next place, it is in line with the policy of the Postal Savings System to keep the money in the locality where it originates. As pointed out by my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] the other day, a town there to which he referred has 12,000 inhabitants or more and has three or four State banks and no National banks, and none of the State banks a member of the Federal reserve system. In that case it would require the money to be sent to a distant point, although they were ready to give absolute security in the shape of municipal bonds, supported by the taxing power.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman's amendment change existing law in this particular? Under existing law 30 per cent of the postal savings funds are available by the board of trustees for investment in Government bonds and postal savings bonds and 65 per cent are to be deposited in local State banks, subject to the call of the President for use of the Government, whereas the gentleman's amendment provides that the funds shall only be utilized by the Government of the United States when an exigency exists.

Mr. STEENERSON. I believe that is the language of the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. This amendment was added in the Senate and agreed to in conference, and I fought it here in company with others.

Mr. STEENERSON. I stand corrected, but anyway it is the judgment of both Houses of Congress that this was the wise thing to do, and it is the last judgment expressed by the legislative branch of the Government. The conference report was agreed to by the House. It was passed by both Houses. It is certified, as can be seen on the veto message, by the Speaker and the Vice President, and was complete, so far as the legislative branch was concerned, and was vetoed, as I have stated. I believe we ought to give the Executive a chance to reconsider the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (H. DOC. NO. 495).

Mr. GARD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be permitted at this time to submit the unanimous report of the joint select committee appointed pursuant to the act of Congress of March 3, 1915, to determine the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia, and also to submit therewith the separate report of Senator WORKS, a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of the joint select committee appointed pursuant to the act of Congress of March 3, 1915, to determine the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered printed.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, in regard to minors. I made the suggestion that the increase in the limit of deposits from $500 to $2,000 might enable persons to deposit large amounts in the name of minor children and embarrass their creditors. I do not think that is a serious objection. I am not going to urge it now. They tell me that experience has shown—which I did not know when I made the objection—that there are no cases of that kind so far, and probably will not be in the future, and for that reason I am not urging it. The suggestion was not particularly my own, but I thought it should be submitted to the House in view of the very large increase in the limit of deposits. While it is true that it is laudable and wise to encourage saving and thrift among the young, it is also true that it is just as laudable to encourage honesty.

It is conceivable that the privilege might be abused, and if that should develop in the future it could be remedied by legislation. I am not opposed to the bill, but I believe it would be a better bill if some such amendment as I have offered were agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota as not germane.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a few minutes?

Mr. MOON. Very well. How long does the gentleman desire me to withhold it?

Mr. MANN. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. MOON. All right.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a rather simple proposition. Under the existing law the postal savings depositors can only have $500 to their credit exclusive of interest. This bill proposes to raise that amount to $1,000, which may draw interest, and an additional $1,000 which will not draw interest. I can see no possible objection to the provisions of the bill, so I would be very glad indeed, if it were practicable, to have a provision inserted in the bill such as was carried in the original postal savings bank law authorizing the deposit of savings in State as well as National banks. That was really a part of the compromise agreement in the House at the time the postal savings bank bill became a law.

For years there has been a controversy as to how the money should be invested by the Government when it accepted savings, and it was finally determined, I think very happily, that it might be invested in the local banks, both National and State. When the Federal reserve act was passed, the people urging that act were then desirous of compelling or urging all of the State banks that they could possibly get to come into the Federal reserve system, and they provided that those savings bank deposits could only be placed in members of the Federal reserve bank system. We passed an act a year ago changing that in connection with the provisions of this bill authorizing an increase of the savings that they might be deposited in State banks as well as National banks, going back to the original State bank act. The Federal Reserve Board itself had just taken their offices. They did not know how much it might be necessary to have as part of the system the State banks, and they were then using every effort possible to force the State banks into the Federal reserve system. I do not think they are so insistent now as they were then, and on their advice when the bill was passed in the last Congress the President vetoed the bill.

Now, I am not in favor of accepting the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] at this time. I do not think that where the President has vetoed a simple bill like this we should send it to him again in the same form it was sent to him before. We ought to respect his veto, so I think that gentlemen here who are interested in having these deposits in the State banks ought to confer with the members of the Federal Reserve Board and see whether they can not remove their opposition to the deposit of these funds in State banks as well as National banks. It is quite evident that the State banks generally throughout the country are not coming into the Federal reserve system, and the only reason they offered for refusing to permit those deposits in the State banks was to force them into the system. Now, as they are not coming into the system, I think everybody will admit that where we accept postal savings bank deposits in the towns throughout the country those deposits should be deposited in the local banks in those towns and not force their removal somewhere else to a national bank; but for the present I do not believe we ought to endanger or encumber the bill by adding to its provisions such an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] makes the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota that it is not germane.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman desire to argue that?

Mr. MOON. No; I do not think it is susceptible of argument. It is not germane, because this is simply a proposition to limit the deposits. The gentleman's provision goes not only to the control of the reserve system, but to the interest that may be taken and the amount that must be held in reserve by the department, which is altogether a different proposition.

Mr. STEENERSON. In answer to the gentleman, I wish to appeal from the decision of the gentleman from Tennessee now to his decision in the last Congress. He introduced a bill containing both provisions. His bill was vetoed because of one provision, and now this amendment restores his own bill to that status.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman from Minnesota allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. That was a part of the bill then and, of course, it was in order; and I was for it then, and I would be for it now under proper circumstances.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not suggest anything different. You were authority, and the gentleman, then, must have thought it germane.

Mr. MOON. It was in the bill. Of course, it was germane then. But it is not in the bill now.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, it relates to the Postal Savings System and is certainly very closely connected, and I submit to the Speaker that the point is not well taken. I do not wish to delay matters by argument.

The SPEAKER. The Moon bill contains one simple proposition, and that is to increase the amount that can be deposited. That is the only subject there is in the bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] is entirely different from that. It treats of regulations and rates of interest and all the rest. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. BENNET rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to offer a substitute.

Mr. HOWARD. I offer the substitute which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] reserve recognition on this bill?

Mr. LLOYD. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read the substitute in part.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, enough of that substitute has been read to show that it is not in order. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] makes the point of order that the substitute is not germane. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, the part of the bill that the gentleman has made the point of order against is the exact language of the existing law. The length of this substitute would not affect its germaneness at all. The main provision in this substitute is the fact that the present bill under consideration limits the amount upon which interest is paid and then provides for an amount upon which no interest is paid, and states the amount of interest to be paid, and so forth. The substitute that I offer reenacts the law of 1910 in substance, and simply takes off the limitation upon deposits.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Georgia would offer an amendment or a substitute embracing the last statement that he made, the Chair would rule that that was germane.

Mr. HOWARD. That is exactly what it does.

The SPEAKER. I know; but his substitute has a whole lot of provisions in it that have nothing to do in the world with the amount of money to be deposited.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand, sir. That is true, but it is put in operation. In other words, it is an improvement, I submit, on the act of 1910, and in a large portion it is a reenactment of the law of 1910, using the identical language. The main provision of this substitute is the fact that the limit upon which interest is paid is entirely removed, and that is germane, I submit, Mr. Speaker, to the pending measure. I think if the Speaker will hear the substitute read in full he will agree with me as to the germaneness of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard enough of it read and has read enough of it to know that it is a general bill on the subject of postal savings banks. It might be the best bill that has been written since the beginning of time.

Mr. HOWARD. I think it is, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. And every man in the House might be in favor of it, but at the same time it is not germane to the proposition that is brought in here by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. If the gentleman will take his substitute and offer that provision to take the limit off of deposits, the Chair would unhesitatingly rule that that is in order; but as it stands it is clearly not germane to the proposition pending.

Mr. HOWARD. The Speaker would not permit my colleagues the enjoyment that they would receive by reading this bill in the RECORD. I would like to get the verbiage of it in the RECORD. That is really a great portion of my purpose. I ask——

Mr. MANN. Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to save time, that this be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the substitute offered by him may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill, offered as a substitute, is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6812) to establish postal savings banks, to enable the Government to borrow money directly from the people, and to market its bonds directly to the people in small and varying denominations through the medium of the post office, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, created a board of trustees for the control, supervision, and administration of the postal savings depository offices designated and established under the provisions of this act, and of the funds received as deposits at such postal savings depository offices by virtue thereof. Said board shall consist of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General, severally, acting ex officio, and shall have power to make all necessary and proper regulations for the receipt, transmittal, custody, deposit, investment, and repayment of the funds deposited at postal savings depository offices.

The board of trustees shall submit a report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session showing by States and Territories (for the preceding fiscal year) the number and names of post offices receiving deposits, the aggregate amount of deposits therein, and withdrawals therefrom, the number of deposits made in each, the total amount standing to the credit of all depositors at the conclusion of the year, the amount of the interest due thereon, the amount of such deposits at interest, the amount of interest received thereon, the amount of interest paid thereon, and the number and amount of unclaimed deposits. Also the amount of extra expense of the Post Office Department and the Postal Service incident to the operation of the postal savings depository system, and all other facts which it may deem pertinent and proper to present.

SEC. 2. That provisions of section 3 of the act of July 5, 1884, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes," are hereby extended and made applicable to all official mail matter pertaining to the business of the Postal Savings System.

SEC. 3. That with the object of promptly establishing postal savings depository offices at every post office in the United States the said board of trustees is hereby directed to designate as rapidly as possible post offices to be postal savings depository offices: Provided, That within one year from the date of the approval of this act every post office in the United States shall be so designated, and each and every post office so designated by order of said board is hereby declared to be a postal savings depository office within the meaning of this act, and to be authorized and required to receive deposits of funds from the public and to account for and dispose of the same according to the provisions of the act and the regulations made in pursuance thereof. Each postal savings depository office shall be kept open for the transaction of business during such hours as the Postmaster General, with the approval of the board of trustees, shall direct.

SEC. 4. That deposits may be made in any postal savings depository established under this act by any person of the age of 10 years or over, in his or her own name, and by a married woman in her own name and free from any control or interference by her husband.

SEC. 5. That the postmaster at a postal saving depository shall, upon the tendering of a deposit under this act, deliver to the depositor, free of cost, as an evidence of his deposit, a United States Government coupon bond, substantially of the size of the present paper currency, to be designated as a postal savings bond. Such bond shall be issued in the amount of the deposit: Provided, That no single bond shall exceed the value of $100: Provided further, That any number of such bonds may be issued to the same person to represent the amount of his or her deposit. All such bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum from the date of such deposit. Such interest shall be payable semiannually and shall be represented by coupons of the same size as the bonds, attached to the bond, maturing at intervals of six months, each for 1 per cent of the face of the bond. The said bonds shall be made payable to the depositor by inserting his name in writing on the face of the bond, or, at the option of the depositor, to bearer, and shall be payable at any time on demand at the post office of issue or at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., upon presentation of the bond properly indorsed (unless payable to bearer), with all unmatured coupons attached, likewise properly indorsed, unless payable to bearer. The coupons attached to such bonds shall be readily detachable and shall be payable on demand on or after their due date at the post office of issue or at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C. The coupons attached to said bonds shall be made payable to bearer, unless the depositor requests that they be restricted, in which case they shall be made payable to the depositor by name.

The number of coupons to be attached to each of such bonds shall not be less than two, and such larger number as may be determined by the board of trustees. Each of said bonds shall bear a serial number. Upon the bond shall be shown the amount of deposit or face value of the bond, the date of such deposit or the date of issue of the bond, the value of each coupon attached to the bond, and the due date of the last maturing coupon attached to the bond at the time of its issue. Upon each coupon shall be shown the value of the coupon and its due date, as well as the amount of the deposit or the face value of the bond, and the date of the deposit or the date of issue of the bond.

Upon the delivery of such coupon bond as an evidence of deposit, the postmaster issuing the same shall take three similar receipts, or a receipt in triplicate, from the depositor. Each of these receipts shall show the amount of deposit or face value of the bond, the date of deposit or date of issue of the bond, the value of each coupon attached to the bond, and the due date of the last maturing coupon. Of these three receipts one shall be retained at the post office of issue and filed numerically, according to the serial number of said bond. The other two signature cards shall be forwarded on the day of issue to the Postmaster General, who shall file one of them numerically and the other alphabetically. On each bond, coupon, and signature card shall appear the name or serial number of the post office of issue and the serial number of the bond.

The forms of coupon bonds shall be prepared by or under the direction of the Postmaster General, and shall be delivered to the postmaster at each post office as required, under rules to be adopted by the board of trustees.

SEC. 6. That bonds, as described in section 5, shall be issued only in denominations of $1 or multiples of $1: Provided, That in order that smaller amounts may be accumulated for deposit any person may purchase for 10 cents from any depository office a postal savings card, to which may be attached specially prepared adhesive stamps, to be known as postal savings stamps; and when the stamps so attached amount to $1 or a larger sum in multiples thereof, including the 10-cent postal savings card, the same may be accpted as cash, and when a card and stamps thereto attached are accepted as a deposit the postmaster shall immediately cancel the same. It is hereby made the duty of the Postmaster General to prepare such postal savings cards and postal savings stamps of denominations of 10 cents, and to keep them on sale at every postal savings depository office, and to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for the issue, sale, and cancellation thereof.

No interest shall be paid on fractions of a dollar, nor shall any interest be paid for a shorter period than six months. Interest shall be paid only upon the surrender of mature coupons at or after their due date.

SEC. 7. That any depositor may withdraw the whole or any part of the funds deposited to his or her credit, with the interest due thereon (as shown by due or past due coupons), upon demand upon the presentation at the post office of issue or at the Post Office Department, at Washington, D. C., of the postal savings bond representing such deposit, with all unmatured coupons attached, the bond and coupons so surrended being properly indorsed (when not payable to bearer) in accordance with their terms, under such regulations as the board of trustees may prescribe. In case of a partial withdrawal the new postal savings bond issued to represent the balance remaining on deposit may be so dated as to allow interest on such balance from the date of its original deposit, under such regulations as the board of trustees may prescribe.

Withdrawals shall be charged against and eventually paid from the deposits in the State or Territory, so far as the postal funds on deposit in such State or Territory may be sufficient for the purpose, and, so far as practicable, shall be charged against and eventually paid from the deposits in the community in which the deposit was made. No bank in which postal savings funds shall be deposited shall receive any exchange or any other fees or compensation on account of the cashing or collection of any bonds, coupons, or checks, or the performance of any other service in connection with the postal savings depository system.

SEC. 8. That postal savings funds received under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in solvent banks, whether organized under National or State laws, being subject to National or State supervision and examination, and the sums deposited shall bear interest at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum, which rate shall be uniform throughout the United States and Territories thereof. The board of trustees shall take from such banks such security, in public bonds or other securities supported by the taxing power, as the board may prescribe, approve, and deem sufficient and necessary to insure the safety and prompt payment of such deposits on demand. The funds received at the postal savings depository offices in each city, town, village, and other locality shall be deposited in banks located therein (substantially in proportion to the capital and surplus of each such bank) willing to receive such deposits under the terms of this act and the regulations made by authority thereof, but the amount deposited in any one bank shall at no time exceed the amount of the paid-in capital and one-half the surplus of such bank. If no such bank exist in any city, town, village, or locality, or if none where such deposits are made will receive such deposits on the terms prescribed, then such funds shall be deposited under the terms of this act in the bank most convenient to such locality. If no such bank in any State or Territory is willing to receive such deposits on the terms prescribed, then the same shall be deposited with the treasurer of the board of trustees and shall be counted in making up the reserve herein provided for.

Such percentage of said deposits as the board of trustees may from time to time designate, not to be less than 5 per cent and not to exceed 25 per cent of the total postal savings deposits, may be withdrawn by said board of trustees and deposited in lawful money and maintained with the Treasurer of the United States, who shall be treasurer of the board of trustees. Of the amount so deposited 5 per cent of the total postal savings deposits shall be held as a reserve and the balance held by said Treasurer of the United States shall serve as a working balance out of which to pay current withdrawals on bonds and coupons presented for payment at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., and for other purposes herein set out. The Treasurer may deposit such funds, or any part thereof, with a Federal reserve bank or banks, selected by the board of trustees, at the same rate of interest as is paid by other banks on postal savings deposits, such deposits with Federal reserve bank or banks to be otherwise on the same basis as other Government deposits with said banks. Or such deposits, or a part of them, may be deposited with member banks of the Federal reserve banks, selected from time to time by the board of trustees and changed by the board of trustees as it deems wise, so as to facilitate the handling of the postal savings business in the various parts of the country. But deposits of such funds by the Treasurer with member banks shall be on the same terms as are provided herein for local deposits of postal savings funds as to security required, limitation of amount, and interest charged.

Such funds may be withdrawn from the treasurer of said board of trustees and all other postal savings funds, or any part of such funds may be at any time withdrawn from banks and savings depository offices for the repayment of postal savings depositors, when required for that purpose. Any part of the amount deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, except 5 per cent of the total postal savings deposits, which shall always be maintained by the Treasurer as a reserve, may be withdrawn for the purpose of purchasing and retiring any of the long-term bonds of the United States now or hereafter outstanding; or may be used for such purposes as Congress may hereafter decide; or may be withdrawn and used in time of war or public calamity or pestilence for the needs of the United States, but then only by the direction of the President, and only when in his judgment the general welfare and the interests of the United States so require. Interest and profit accruing from the deposit or investment of postal savings funds shall be applied to the payment of interest due to postal savings depositors as hereinbefore provided, and the excess thereof, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as part of the postal revenue: Provided, That postal savings funds in the treasury of said board shall be subject to disposition as provided in this act, and not otherwise. For the purposes of this act the word "Territory," as used herein, shall be held to include the District of Columbia, the District of Alaska, and Porto Rico, and the word "bank" shall be held to include savings banks and trust companies doing a banking business.

SEC. 9. That any holder of postal-savings coupon bonds issued under this act, of the aggregate value of more than $100, may at any time surrender the same and receive in lieu thereof postal-savings coupon bonds in denominations of over $100 and not exceeding $1,000, to the extent of the bonds so surrendered. But such postal-savings bonds of a larger denomination than $100 shall be issued and payable only at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., and shall be issued only in exchange for postal-savings bonds of smaller denomination issued under this act. Such bonds of larger denomination shall be similar to those issued by the local postal-savings depositories, except that they shall have a maximum value of $1,000 instead of $100. The board of trustees shall prescribe the rules and regulations under which such exchange can be effected.

SEC. 10. That postal-savings depository funds shall be kept separate from other funds by postmasters and other officers and employees of the Postal Service, who shall be held to the same accountability under their bonds for such funds as for public moneys; and no person connected with the Post Office Department shall disclose to any person other than the depositor the amount of any deposits unless directed so to do by the Postmaster General. All statutes relating to the safekeeping of and proper accounting for postal receipts are made applicable to postal-savings funds, and the Postmaster General may require postmasters, assistant postmasters, and clerks at postal-savings depositories to give any additional bond he may deem necessary.

SEC. 11. That postmasters, assistant postmasters, clerks, or other employees at post offices of the presidential grade, and postmasters at post offices of the fourth class, shall not be allowed or paid any additional compensation for the transaction of postal-savings depository business.

SEC. 12. That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Postmaster General and the board of trustees to establish postal savings depositories in accordance with the provisions of this act, and to substitute the coupon bonds herein described for the certificates now outstanding as an evidence of postal savings deposits, including the reimbursement of the Secretary of the Treasury for expenses incident to the preparation, issue, and distribution of the bonds authorized in this act; and the Postmaster General is authorized to require postmasters and other postal officers and employees to transact, in connection with their other duties, such postal savings depository business as may be necessary; and he is also authorized to make and, with the approval of the board of trustees, to promulgate, and from time to time to modify or revoke, subject to the approval of said board, such rules and regulations, not in conflict with law, as he may deem necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect.

SEC. 13. That all the safeguards provided by law for the protection of public moneys and all statutes relating to the embezzlement, conversion, improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of postal money-order funds, and the punishments provided for such offenses, are hereby extended and made applicable to postal savings depository funds, and all statutes relating to false returns of postal and money-order business, the forgery, counterfeiting, alteration, improper use, or handling of United States bonds, postal and money-order blanks, forms, vouchers, accounts, and records, and the dies, plates, and engravings therefor, with the penalties provided in such statutes, are hereby extended and made applicable to postal savings depository business, and the forgery, counterfeiting, alteration, improper use, or handling of postal savings depository blanks, bonds, forms, vouchers, accounts, and records, and the dies, plates, and engravings therefor.

SEC. 14. That the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment of the deposits made in the postal savings depository offices, with interest thereon as herein provided.

SEC. 15. That the final judgment, order, or decree of any court of competent jurisdiction, adjudicating any right or interest in the credit of any sums deposited by any person with a postal savings depository, if the same shall not have been appealed from and the time for appeal has expired, shall, upon submission to the Postmaster General of a copy of the same, duly authenticated in the manner provided by the laws of the United States for the authentication of the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State or Territory or of any possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, when the same are proved or admitted within any other court within the United States, be accepted and pursued by the board of trustees as conclusive of the title, right, interest, or possession so adjudicated, and any payment of said sum in accordance with such order, judgment, or decree shall operate as a full and complete discharge of the United States from the claim or demand of any person or persons to the same.

SEC. 16. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith, and particularly of the act approved June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes," be, and are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOON. Did I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to say that his only purpose was to get it in the RECORD?

Mr. HOWARD. No; but so my colleagues can be enlightened on this postal savings bank proposition. They have had no light up to date.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. LLOYD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the pending bill has no purpose except to change the amount that may be deposited in postal savings banks and to authorize that amount to be deposited in different sums from those which the law now permits. At the present time no individual can deposit more than $100 in any one month or more than $500 in any one year. If this bill becomes a law an individual may deposit $2,000, $1,000 of which will draw interest at the existing rate, and the other $1,000 will draw no interest. When the original postal savings bank proposition was before this House for consideration there was serious opposition on account of what was supposed would be injury to the banks of the country. The opposition that was presented was the opposition of the banks, but at the present time the banks are not even opposing this proposed amendment to the existing law. They have discovered that the Postal Savings Bank System is a benefit to them and to the country, in that it is taking money that is now in hiding, that is not now in circulation, and placing it in circulation so that it may be useful to the country. In order that you may understand that the banks are not opposed to this measure or the present Postal System, I wish to call your attention to what was done at the meeting of the American Bankers' Association.

Evidence of the reasonableness of the pending bill from a banker's viewpoint is found in a report by a special committee on postal-savings legislation to the savings banks section of the American Bankers' Association at its national convention last spring at Seattle. In discussing this very bill the committee said:

> The limitation of $500, therefore, still exists, but it is understood that the Sixty-fourth Congress will enact legislation raising the limit of interest-bearing deposits to $1,000 and giving discretionary powers to the board of trustees to accept an additional $1,000 without interest; from the knowledge acquired by your committee in its efforts to have the original bill amended and from a frank interchange of views with the Director of the Postal Savings System we feel that the desire of the trustees for this increase of authority is not unreasonable and will not work any hardship upon our savings banks. We have been assured that it is not the policy of the Postal Savings System to compete with the existing agencies for saving, but endeavors only to supplement them, and in so far as we are able our members should cooperate with every effort to cultivate the thrift habit of our people.

This shows very clearly that the bankers who have looked into this matter are not opposed to the suggested amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. That same committee favors the change of the law so as to allow the funds to be deposited in the State banks which are not members of the Federal reserve system?

Mr. LLOYD. The question whether the moneys shall be deposited in the State banks is not now before us for consideration. It was before the House for consideration in a bill which was passed by the last House.

Mr. STEENERSON. They do favor that, do they not?

Mr. LLOYD. I am not sure whether they do or do not.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will have the effect of increasing the deposits in the postal savings banks of the country. At the present time there is about $75,000,000 deposited in the postal savings banks. I realize that the suggestion that is made by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] that the money ought to be deposited in the State banks is a matter of general concern; but, on the other hand——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague [Mr. LLOYD] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LLOYD. But, on the other hand, this is not, when seriously considered, an important matter. The money that is deposited in the postal savings banks of the country is deposited in the cities and not in the country districts. This provision will not affect any State savings institutions in any country districts in the United States unless it be in a community in which there is a large number of persons of foreign birth. In nearly every district of the United States where there are no towns of populations of more than 5,000 inhabitants there are no deposits of consequence in the postal savings banks.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not also true, I will ask my colleague, that the laborers of foreign birth in the great cities who use the postal savings banks would otherwise send their money abroad by postal notes and money orders?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; and that is a point I was going to make.

Mr. BORLAND. They sent their money out of the country before we had the postal savings banks, and now they are being encouraged to deposit their savings in the postal savings banks here.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. The object is to encourage them to patronize Postal Savings System to a greater extent. If we did not have the Postal Savings System a large amount of this money now in savings banks would have been sent abroad, and the rest of it would have remained in hiding. There are two classes of money that go into the postal savings banks. One class is the money that comes out of hiding and is placed in the postal savings banks, and the other is the money sent abroad, money that would be sent abroad by the individual who earns the money and has the savings in the United States.

This bill was favored by the President of the United States when he vetoed the bill that was pending before him in the last Congress. This particular measure has been favored by the President of the United States, is favored by the Postmaster General, and is urged by the Third Assistant Postmaster General, who has general supervision of postal savings matters. And in this connection I wish to say with reference to him that he is a banker. He is connected with the money interests of Missouri, and you can be readily assured that he is not going to favor any system that in his judgment will in any way interfere with the business interests of the United States. He is very anxious about the passage of this measure because he thinks it will add largely to the amount that will be deposited in these banks and will take out of hiding at least $75,000,000 more of the money that is now withdrawn from circulation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I was explaining, is indorsed by everyone that has been connected in any way with the investigation of the subject. It is indorsed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House. It is indorsed by the executive branch of the Government. It is indorsed by the banks. It is urged by the people, and it is insisted upon by those who desire to deposit their money in these institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] has just made an argument in favor of his bill which, it seems to me, should cause the House to give very serious consideration to an amendment to take off the limit controlling the deposits in the postal savings banks. We are assured that the bankers are satisfied with this bill; that their interests have been safeguarded; that a committee of bankers has gone over this proposition and has consulted with the officials of this Government; and we have been assured that it is not the intention of anyone connected with the Post Office Department to do anything which will injure the banking interests of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I am not so much concerned about the effects of this legislation upon the banking interests of this country. I am concerned about the effect of this bill upon the men who want to put their savings in a place where they will be secure. I hold that the Government of the United States should provide a place where those who, through thrift and self-sacrifice, have succeeded in getting together a few dollars may place that money with some assurance that it will be returned to them.

I live in an industrial community, a city of 60,000 people, the greatest industrial community in my State. We have had two bank failures in that city. One bank failure involved 6,000 depositors, most of them poor men or those in very humble circumstances. I want a law that will protect those men, and I do not want the Congress of the United States to give so much consideration to what will benefit the bankers and so little consideration to what will benefit the depositors. If we had had a proper Postal Savings System, the workingmen of my home town would have had a place where they might have put their savings. As it was, the postmaster of my town has assured me that men have come to him and literally with tears in their eyes have begged him for permission to put their deposits in Uncle Sam's savings bank, and the postmaster has been compelled to deny them that privilege. I say, gentlemen, that that permission should not be denied by this Congress, and particularly should not be denied by the Democratic side of this Congress; and I trust the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], before we adjourn to-day, will give us an opportunity to vote on a proposition which will absolutely remove the limit, and give the people of the United States a real Postal Savings System, and not the fake system which we have on the statute books to-day.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HULBERT moves to amend by striking out the words "but upon which no interest shall be paid" in lines 3 and 4, page 2, and insert in place and stead thereof the words "upon which interest may be paid."

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the principle of this bill. I have heard it stated here in the debate that the amount of $2,000 fixed in the bill as the limit of deposits is an arbitrary amount, but I have heard no explanation offered for the division of $1,000 upon which interest may be paid, and the reception of additional deposits not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000 upon which interest shall not be paid. On the other hand, it is provided by the bill "that the board of trustees may, in their discretion" receive the additional deposits, so that the reception of the additional $1,000 is entirely discretionary with the board, and it can only be received "under such regulations as the board may promulgate" as to additional deposits, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000. Therefore I have proposed the amendment in order that, if it shall appear in the discretion of the board of trustees desirable at any time to allow and make payment of interest upon the additional $1,000 as the growth of the postal savings bank system progresses, the board shall have the power to promulgate a rule under which that can be done. Otherwise, if the board of trustees should so determine, their decision would necessarily await the consequent delay of further legislation before it could be put into operation.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is one amendment pending. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HULBERT) there were—ayes 51, noes 79.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD:
Page 1, line 9, after the word "payable," insert the words "shall be unlimited," and strike out the remainder of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to call attention to one proposition in this bill that I do not think anybody has discussed.

When the European war broke out, England had in her postal savings deposits about $802,000,000, and she had what is commonly known in banking circles in the United States as the "pass-book" system as a method of evidencing these deposits. In the calculation of interest upon these deposits, it was found necessary to employ 4,068 clerks to keep the interest accounts of the postal savings depositors in the main office.

If this amendment is passed limiting the amount to $1,000 upon which interest shall be paid and then placing a limit on the amount that can be deposited upon which no interest is paid, it will be absolutely necessary that the force in the postal savings banks shall not only be as great as the number employed in England, because we have the additional certificates rather than the pass-book system, but you have got to keep one set of bookkeepers to keep the interest accounts of the depositor upon which you do pay interest and then you have got to keep another set of bookkeepers to keep the account upon which you do not pay any interest. The result will be that the depositor will naturally draw his money from his live account. Then the bookkeepers must transfer to the live account a portion of the deposit that is on the noninterest-bearing account.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman speaks of the necessity of having two sets of bookkeepers. Why could not one set of bookkeepers keep both accounts?

Mr. HOWARD. I mean that they will need twice as many bookkeepers to keep two different accounts. If the gentleman knows anything about bookkeeping, he knows that that is true, that if you have twice as many accounts to keep you have got to have twice as many bookkeepers to keep them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin again rose.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman permit me——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HOWARD. In just a moment I will yield.

Here is a man who puts in $1,000, and he puts it in $50, or $60, or $100 at a time. You are keeping books on him to see when he reaches the point where the Government refuses to pay interest under the law. Then he is withdrawing deposits all the time, and you are keeping a system of books against him to see when the limit of his interest-bearing account has reached the point where you do not pay interest and where the noninterest-bearing account begins. It is absolutely absurd as a matter of principle, and any man within the sound of my voice who knows anything at all about modern bookkeeping, and who has ever kept anything except a single-entry set of books, knows that the statement I make is absolutely true. Now, you are placing the Government in the absurd position of employing at least a third more men than are necessary in the postal savings bank to keep these accounts.

Furthermore, it is absurd to limit the amount of money that can be deposited in the postal savings bank. If a citizen wants to deposit his money with the Government of the United States at 2 per cent, and the Government can turn around and deposit that money at 2½ per cent, why do you want to pass a law to prevent that man from depositing his money with the Government? The Government loses nothing. It encourages savings; it brings larger sums of our circulating medium into the legitimate channels of commerce, and eventually benefits the whole people in every walk of life.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman was speaking of the absurdity of paying interest on only a part of the money deposited. Does not every savings bank in the country do that very thing?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know, and I care nothing about what the savings banks do.

Mr. BORLAND. Do not the savings banks require the money to be on deposit 30 days?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; and some of them six months, and some of them require a year; and some of them pay 4 per cent; and if you will take the current magazines of this country and will look at the great advertisements put in them by these savings-bank people, offering to pay 3½ and 4 per cent, you will wonder why it would not be just as well for them to have the money deposited with the postal savings bank of the Government and then reloaned to them at 2½ per cent, and why they should not desire to have the Government accumulate the money, rather than to go into this vast advertising scheme to gather the deposits of savers throughout the country.

Mr. BORLAND. This is not raising the rate of interest.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Missouri did not understand me. The cost of accumulating the savings deposits in private institutions is at least 2½ per cent. Therefore why object to the Government doing it, when it is placed in banks at the same cost?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] seems to be very fine on bookkeeping, but he is a little short on legislation, in my judgment. He says we are going to inaugurate a system of bookkeeping that will require double the number of bookkeepers and will double the expense. I call attention to the fact that the deposits are now at the maximum, and the cost of keeping the books is less than it was two years ago. The expenses in connection with this matter two years ago was $205,000 and last year it was $168,000; and yet under the anticipation of the passage of this measure the department says that they can take care of all these matters for $161,000. There never was a better maxim than "festina lente"—let us make haste slowly. Let us go slowly in this matter. A great many believed that the postal system would be of no value; but the deposits have so increased that the Government is making a substantial profit out of it, and when we have extended the limit which the administration thinks wise for the present we think it will be sufficient. If we find that it is necessary to take the limit off afterwards, when we have operated for some time under the law as we propose, we can then take the limit off if it appears that it will be beneficial so to do, but for the present I think we had better go slowly.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman does not argue that we should go slowly in taking the limit off of deposits for the same reason that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] argued it, does he?

Mr. MOON. I do not know as to the argument of the gentleman from Missouri, but I insist that as a general proposition in legislation, the result of all mature judgment on every question of legislation is that when a new system of any kind is involved it is wise to go slowly until its value is developed and we can see what is best to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I am in favor of the pending measure and intend to vote for it, although I wish it were more liberal. There are some things which if added would make it a better bill. The amendment proposed by my distinguished colleague from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], if added to the bill, in my humble opinion would have made a better bill out of it.

Money is used either in commerce, where the returns are quick and the hazard great, or it is used in long-time investments where the returns for its use are small and the hazard practically eliminated, or it is withdrawn from use and hoarded. The Federal reserve system was inaugurated for the purpose of taking care of the commercial interests of this country and not for the purpose of taking care of the demands of the investing public. It is the commercial agent of this Government, and it deals with the commercial transactions and commercial needs of the people. The savings banks and trust companies and other financial institutions organized under State laws supply the wants of those who are seeking investments where the hazard is eliminated, though the return may be small. In perfecting the Federal reserve system the distinction between these classes was distinctly recognized and provided for by keeping the assets of the banks belonging to the Federal system liquid and eliminating everything that would in any way impair the ability of a bank belonging to the Federal reserve system to quickly convert its assets into cash.

By applying this principle to the processes of the Federal reserve system the investing public or the borrower on long-time security was deprived of any of the benefits of the system except in the case of farm loans, where an exception to this general principle was made for his benefit. Moreover, the city dweller, though having excellent real estate security to offer, is denied the privilege and opportunity of borrowing a cent on his city property from any bank belonging to the Federal reserve system.

Before the passage of the Federal reserve act postal savings were deposited in banks under Federal and State supervision, which qualified to accept them, and qualification was effected by a bank depositing with the Treasurer of the United States approved bonds as security for the payment of postal savings deposits on demand. The Federal reserve act, which went into operation November 15, 1914, under section 15 prohibited the deposit of postal savings in any bank except those belonging to the Federal reserve system. In 1914 there were postal savings deposits of about $43,000,000. About twenty-five millions of this amount were deposited in State banks and trust companies not member banks of the Federal reserve system. Since November 15, 1914, the date that the Federal reserve act went into effect, no postal savings deposits have been deposited by the Government in State institutions, but the surplus must be turned over to the banks belonging to the Federal reserve system.

The Sixty-third Congress passed an act repealing section 15 of the Federal reserve act, in so far as that act prohibited the depositing of postal savings funds in State institutions. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] is identical with the bill passed by the Sixty-third Congress covering this same subject. This bill was vetoed by the President on September 11, 1914. In his message the President stated that when the Federal reserve act was passed it was thought wise to make the inducements to State banks to enter the Federal reserve system as many and as strong as possible. It was therefore provided in the act that Government funds should be deposited only in banks which were members of the Federal reserve system, and that the principle of such a provision is sound and undisputable.

From the angle at which the President was viewing the question his conclusion is sound, but the question has a much broader aspect than simply the compelling of State banks to enter the Federal reserve system, and I am confident that if the President had viewed the proposition from all its angles he would have arrived at a different conclusion.

The postal savings deposits are owned by the laboring classes residing in the industrial cities of the country. For example, 90 per cent of the postal savings deposits of the State of New York is in New York City, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Rochester, and Long Island City, and one-fourth of all the savings deposits—amounting now to $73,000,000—is in Greater New York. In the State of Minnesota 70 per cent of the deposits is in the cities of Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth. What is true of New York and Minnesota is true of every other State in the Union. If these postal savings deposits are required to be deposited in banks belonging to the Federal reserve system, which are organized and conducted solely for commercial purposes, the laboring masses of our great industrial cities who own practically all of the postal savings deposits will be unable to borrow a dollar of this money for the purpose of building or purchasing a city home.

It is an unwise policy to make all the financial institutions of the country subservient to the interests of the Federal reserve system, which is a commercial banking system only. If the Federal reserve system attempted to carry on, regulate, and control all classes of financial institutions, there would be some reason for turning over savings accounts and investment funds to that system.

When you take the deposits of savings banks and turn them over to commercial banks you are discriminating against the laboring man, because the amount of money for long-time investment is lessened. The laborer, if he borrows at all, borrows from the investment banker, not the commercial bank. The laboring man has nothing but his money, and if he loses that at any time during the progress of his savings the chances are that he will be a pauper for the rest of his life.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman says the laboring man has nothing but his money. Let us concede that to be true. Is it not better for him that the deposit of his money be in a bank that is under the control of the Government, with the Government behind it?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. If that were all there is to the gentleman's proposition, I would say yes, but it is not. In the first place these savings are secured by municipal bonds that are based on the taxing power of the municipality that issues them. There is nothing in that proposition at all. The only reason that it was made possible to place these deposits in the Federal reserve system was to build up that system at the expense of the other systems of banking, and I say that is unfair; it is unjust.

Mr. MOON. That would not be unfair to the laborer depositor. It would be unfair to the other system of banking.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes; and to the laborer as well.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOWARD and Mr. KEATING) there were—ayes 16, noes 107.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-seven members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 31, nays 318, answered "present" 4, not voting 80, as follows:

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Hawaii. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he is willing to include in his remarks some of the rest of us who had that most delightful and instructive trip to Hawaii with him?

Mr. AUSTIN. I would not do it any other way, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew my request to be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a telegram from Mrs. Lillian Mitchner and a copy of my answer on the subject of national defense.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing a telegram from Mrs. Lillian Mitchner and his answer to it on the subject of national defense. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it may appear very technical, but I wish the gentleman would specifically ask to extend his remarks on the subject of preparedness without indicating it is for the purpose of answering a particular telegram.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of national defense. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Under the special order made the other day the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is recognized for one hour on the subject of the Missouri River.

THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, at this time when so much attention is invited to the important subject of national defense we may be led to overlook the equally necessary work of developing the commercial resources of our country. I can not but concur in the timely and patriotic remarks of the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Franklin K. Lane, in his annual report just issued:

I make bold to express the hope that no other policies of this Government may be allowed to stay the internal development of this country. There is a fear, how general I do not know, that this Government will halt in carrying out its full and needed program of legislation affecting home affairs because of the immediate need for strengthening our national defenses. This apprehension arises, I am confident, out of no lack of sympathy with the plan to increase the Army and the Navy, but out of a feeling that the Government in both executive and legislative branches will be so immersed in matters military and naval as to overlook these matters of less dramatic and perhaps less immediate concern.

PREPAREDNESS NEED NOT PREVENT INTERNAL DEVELOPMENT.

I am anxious to face frankly and boldly the question of national defense and to provide for the safety and dignity of our country and the maintenance of the rights of American citizens at home and abroad. I think these preparations should be ample and not meager, for I feel that there is no danger of our Nation ever going to the extreme of militarism. But I regard as equally important the development of the national wealth and resources of our great country that our people may have an opportunity to build homes, produce wealth, develop commerce, and improve their social and intellectual opportunities. A great, rich, and strong nation can provide for the national defense without the sacrifice of its opportunities for improvement in the arts of peace. I look with more enthusiasm upon the activities of the Federal Government which help the average man, which lead to peace and prosperity. I would rather build homes than battleships and rather dig ditches than graves.

We are told that at this session of Congress there is to be a sweeping attack made upon all forms of internal improvement, and especially upon expenditures for the improvement of rivers and harbors. Instead of waiting for some submarine attack I am willing to draw the fire of the enemy at once and force him, if possible, into the open. [Applause.]

ROMANCE OF THE RIVER.

In 1912 Congress adopted a project of improving the Missouri River after the most careful consideration and repeated examinations and reexaminations by different boards of engineers. Upon the faith of this action by Congress the people of the Missouri Valley, and especially of Kansas City, have invested millions of dollars in restoring commerce to the river, and their efforts have been successful to a remarkable degree. They have solved at the cost of time, effort, and money many of the great and fundamental problems of river navigation. They were the pioneers in a system of transportation which will soon extend to all of the navigable streams of the Mississippi Valley. I would like to tell you something of the romance of the river as illustrated by the efforts of Kansas City and her business men.

The Missouri River Commission passed out of existence in 1902. That commission had done some permanent improvement of the Missouri River, notably a 40-mile stretch near Jefferson City which is still intact and demonstrates that a permanent channel can be constructed and maintained. Most of the money spent by the Missouri River Commission, however, was not devoted to a scientific plan of improvement. Congress unfortunately interfered and required specific expenditures at particular localities; in other words, a pork-barrel method of distributing public money was adopted. Naturally most of the money was wasted, and the Missouri River project has had to bear the odium of these unjustifiable expenditures.

NEW POLICY—CONTINUOUS AND SCIENTIFIC IMPROVEMENT.

In 1907 Congress entered upon a new policy of improving inland waterways on a comprehensive and scientific plan. When I entered Congress in 1909 we had just had a survey and report on the Missouri River by the district office, Capt. (now Maj.) Schulz. He reported a plan for improving that portion of the stream from Kansas City to the mouth to secure a permanent 6-foot channel at an expenditure of $20,000,000, and strongly advised that the improvement be made in a continuous and scientific manner over a sufficient stretch of the river to permit the actual restoration of commerce. When the report came before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives that body was presided over by Hon. Theodore Burton, of Ohio. The commercial interests of the Missouri Valley appealed to the Sixtieth Congress for the adoption of the Missouri River project, but they were met by the statement that there was no general commeree on the Missouri River which would justify the improvement. The reason for the lack of active commerce on the Missouri River had been fully pointed out in Capt. Schulz's report. It was shown that the river traffic had been destroyed during the years when railroads were being built in large numbers into the western country, far in advance of the commercial needs of the country. These railroads for more than 20 years had engaged in a fierce competition for business during a period when the traffic available was not sufficient to support all of the lines. The result was a general system of secret rebates and rate cutting, which crippled the railroads and exhausted much of their capital, and made anything like the maintenance of river traffic impossible. This condition had changed very rapidly with the strict enforcement of the interstate commerce law, and the abolishment of secret rebates and rate cutting, and also with the tremendous growth of traffic in the Missouri Valley. The railroads have reached a point where rates were more stable and where the growing traffic was taxing the capacity of all of the roads.

During the period, however, of railroad competition the river had fallen into complete disuse; commerce on it had practically ceased and could not be restored except upon an improved channel extending over a sufficient reach of the river, as, for instance, from Kansas City to St. Louis, as would make a haul of sufficient length to justify the loading and unloading of boats.

SHIPPERS' BOAT LINE ORGANIZED.

In their request upon Congress to provide a permanent channel on the Missouri River for the restoration of commerce, the commercial interests of the West took the position that the improvement of the river must precede the restoration of commerce, and it was only to a very limited extent that commerce could be restored upon an unimproved river. An attempt to do so would be experimental and be carried on under many disadvantages, which would prevent its being a profitable enterprise. They were assured, however, that if commerce was restored upon the Missouri River upon a basis which promised success, Congress would adopt the project and complete it by sufficient appropriations within a reasonable time. In other words, they were asked to show their own faith in the value of the Missouri River by risking their own capital in the development of water traffic. In accordance with this understanding with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the commercial interests of the Missouri Valley, led by the business men of Kansas City, organized a boat line, which was incorporated September 7, 1909, under the laws of the State of Missouri. The form of incorporation was such as to secure and retain the control of the line in the hands of the merchants and shippers of Kansas City. Preferred stock in this boat line was subscribed by 4,220 Kansas City firms and individuals to the total amount of $1,220,000. More than $1,000,000 of this amount has been collected in cash. In the Sixty-first Congress the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee was Hon. D. S. Alexander, of New York. Chairman Alexander took a deep interest in the Missouri River project and made a personal investigation of it. He came to Kansas City in September, 1909, and made a trip down the river from Kansas City to the mouth, as a result of which he became thoroughly convinced not only of the engineering possibilities of the river but of its tremendous commercial importance.

On June 25, 1910, in the rivers and harbors bill prepared by Chairman Alexander, the first appropriation was made for the permanent improvement of the Missouri River to the amount of $1,000,000, although the project was not formally adopted by Congress. When the bill reached the Senate a provision was inserted by Mr. Burton, of Ohio, who had then become Senator, providing for a reexamination of the project by a board of three engineer officers of the Army. This reexamination was had and resulted in the substantial adoption of the Schulz report and the recommendation of the improvement of the Missouri River from Kansas City to the mouth at a total cost of $20,000,000, to be completed in 10 years. This report reached Congress too late to be incorporated in the regular rivers and harbors bill of the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, but in order that the work on the river so well begun by the appropriation of $1,000,000 should not cease, an authorization of $600,000 to continue the work was made. After this ample foundation had been laid, the project was finally adopted by Congress in the rivers and harbors act of July 25, 1912. The credit for this is due to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, headed by Chairman SPARKMAN, of Florida. In all Congress has appropriated $6,250,000 for the river. On account of the irregularity and uncertainty of the appropriations and the repeated attacks which have been made upon the whole plan of river improvement, the work has been slower and more expensive than it should be, but the latest reports of the engineer officers are that the work can be completed within the estimated cost and the allotted time. The Government has built a plant costing over half a million dollars. It is now proposed to sweep the whole thing away, junk the plant, lose the money invested, and break faith with the commercial interests of the valley, and all this is to be done in the name of economy, or, if that cry fails, in the name of patriotism and preparedness.

FIRST PROBLEM—MODERN BOATS.

Let us see what the commercial interests have done in reliance upon the word of Congress. They have restored commerce upon the Missouri River between Kansas City and St. Louis more rapidly than the improvement of the river has progressed under the Government work. When the first appropriation of $1,000,000 was made in 1910, an agreement was entered into between the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and the Commercial Club of Kansas City that the Government would adopt the project if commerce in good faith should be restored on the river. The shippers have kept in a generous measure their share of this bargain. They found, it is true, a mighty task, for they were resolved not simply to run a few experimental boats as a bluff to cut down railroad rates, but to rebuild on modern lines the obsolescent system of river navigation.

While there is always an abundance of water in the Missouri River, if it be kept within a well-defined channel, the neglect of the channel produces snags, sand bars, and shallow places, which make the navigation of full-draft vessels impossible. It was this channel which the Government had promised to restore, but which our people were compelled to navigate in its then neglected condition. The main problem involved a number of incidental problems, which they must solve not only for their own benefit but for the benefit of all those who undertook to navigate inland streams. There were no types of modern boats available for inland streams. The only craft that could be secured were the old Texas deck boats of ante-bellum days. These are constructed of wood and are so highly inflammable that insurance is almost prohibitive. They are so frail that they are at the mercy of every snag. Most of them carry their power and fuel at the expense of available space for freight. They carry all of their freight on deck, exposed to theft and the weather, and must be loaded and unloaded by hand at a prohibitive cost, requiring the presence of an impossible number of casual laborers or wharf hands at every stopping place. No sane business man would attempt to carry freight under these conditions in competition with an oxcart, let alone with a railroad.

The first task of the Kansas City Missouri River Navigation Co. was to secure a naval architect, a man trained in the technical schools of Germany and familiar with navigation on the Rhine, and send him to every stream in the United States to examine every possible type of river boat. From these careful expenditures of money and effort a type of steel-hull barges was evolved, to be pushed by a power boat. These steel-hull barges were so well protected from the danger of fire, theft, and snags that they eliminated the need for marine insurance. The company can afford to, and does, pay every loss promptly, and the shipper is not required to insure his goods. As the power boat is separate from the barge a higher efficiency can be maintained for both units. While the barge is tied up to the wharf, loading or unloading, the power boat is started again on its trip with other barges which have been loaded.

A portion of the capital was immediately invested in these steel-hulled barges. We found, gentlemen, that the maximum capacity of a steel-hulled barge on a 6-foot channel on a nontidewater stream should be about 2,000 tons. We began by building barges of 1,400 tons, because in the 400-mile stretch between Kansas City and St. Louis there were between 40 and 50 shallow places and shoal crossings where barges of full draft could not get through and where navigation must be limited to the shallowest place in the stream. We began with 1,400-ton barges. We found they were too large and had to be lightered over the shallow places in the river. Then we went down to 1,200-ton barges, and later we went down to barges of 1,000 tons, and now we have gone down to 600-ton barges because the Government has not yet opened up a proper channel navigation between Kansas City and St. Louis.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORLAND. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman if it has been possible for this independent company to which he refers to do a profitable business with a 600-ton barge?

Mr. BORLAND. No; it has not been profitable. We are doing it because the condition of the channel compels us to do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman said they started out with 2,000-ton barges.

Mr. BORLAND. No. I said they started out with 1,400-ton barges.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be of interest to the gentleman from Missouri to know that in my section of the country it has been found to be unprofitable to use barges carrying 900 tons on streams of a depth not exceeding 7 or 8 feet.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is no doubt right about it. We have found this to be the case: On through freight from East St. Louis to Kansas City or return the load ought to be full, as full as the barge can make it, and 2,000 tons is the profitable weight.

But much way freight, such as farmers loading apples, or sacked grain, or hay, or other products of that kind at farm crossings—of which we now have considerable, owing to the encouragement that has been given in the last few years—or at smaller towns along the river, where small lots of merchandise and groceries are loaded, we find that smaller barges can be used at a profit. The power boat leaves the barge at its place of temporary destination. Then the power boat is free to take another load either up or down stream. In the meantime the barge is being loaded or unloaded, without loss of time to the power boat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it will interest the gentleman to know that the New York State Barge Canal, which is being constructed at enormous expense, contemplates the use of 2,000-ton barges, with a depth of 12 feet.

Mr. BORLAND. We believe that they can be run profitably at a depth of 6 feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You are fortunate.

Mr. BORLAND. There is a draft of 4½ feet in the 2,000-ton barges, and we believe they can be run on a permanent draft of 6 feet. In addition to that, the barges must be kept constantly active. Of course it costs proportionately more to handle small barges than to handle large ones, but I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he is familiar with our agricultural country out in the West, there is a class of way freight which it will not pay to pick up with large barges. They can be picked up profitably by 600-ton barges, so that we are solving a problem that is common to all internal waterways, but a problem which has no connection whatever with deep-water shipping.

In the season of 1911 the navigation company operated one old Texas deck boat, called the Chester. In the season of 1915 it had, in addition to the Chester, two modern tunnel-type power boats and a fleet of eight steel barges. In the season of 1916, unless Congress decides to chloroform American enterprise, it will have an additional power boat of an enlarged and improved type and additional barges adapted to way-freight farm products along the river.

SECOND PROBLEM—TERMINALS.

In addition to developing a new type of river craft the boat-line company found that terminals must also be provided. The long neglect of the river had enabled the railroads to seize the water fronts in all of the river cities. The Government might improve the channel at great expense in vain unless proper terminals were provided. Kansas City began the fight by issuing bonds for $75,000 to build a municipal terminal which should be free to all boats without danger of extortion. Before building the terminal, however, it was necessary to force the railroads, by litigation, off the land. Now we have a modern, steel and concrete warehouse, fire, weather, and rat proof, at Kansas City. No shipper is going to permit his goods to be dumped upon a wet or muddy bank exposed to the weather and theft; but, on the other hand, cities can not provide modern terminals unless the Government improves the channel and really performs and finishes what it undertakes. In addition to providing a wharf or landing place and providing proper warehouse facilities there must also be modern electric cranes for the purpose of loading and unloading the boats. Hand labor is too expensive and too uncertain. These modern cranes must lift the goods from the boat to the warehouse or from the boat to the railroad car, or vice versa. This necessitates that there be an articulation of the railroads with the boats at the public wharf by proper switch tracks.

THIRD PROBLEM—SWITCHING CHARGES.

But this is not all. After all this is provided the boats are still at a disadvantage unless they can accept and deliver freight at the warehouses of shippers who are not located near the river. In other words, they must be in a position to compete with railroads which have private switch tracks to every industry and every factory of any size. It became necessary, therefore, for the boat line to absorb switching charges and give the shipper a rate based upon receiving the freight at his establishment or delivering it to his establishment within switching limits from the public wharf.

FOURTH PROBLEM—INTERCHANGE OF TRAFFIC WITH RAIL CARRIERS.

But this is not all. It is necessary for the boat line, if it would compete with the railroads, to interchange freight with connecting rail lines so as to be able to accept freight coming from or destined to any point in the United States to the same extent that the railroads do. If a shipment from Massachusetts were destined to a point in southern Kansas, the boat line should be able to receive it at St. Louis, carry it to Kansas City, and redeliver it to the connecting rail carrier. This necessitates through routes and through rates and a division of rates between the rail and water carrier. To show the earnestness with which Congress has entered upon a plan to restore inland water transportation, we may recall the recent act amending the interstate-commerce act giving the commission power to establish and compel through routes and through rates and interchange of business between water and rail carriers. The railroads were at first inclined to dispute this right and to embarrass our Missouri River boat line. Our boat-line people promptly took the matter up with the Interstate Commerce Commission and won the first victory under this law. The case is Kansas City Missouri River Navigation Co. v. The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Co. (I. C. C., No. 7002, decided May 11, 1915). It involved the right of the boat-line company to demand a division of the through rate for the carriage of flour and milling products from points west of Kansas City for export via Newport News. In this great victory the rights of the western farmer and miller were involved and they were given the benefit of the cheaper water rates. [Applause.]

FIFTH PROBLEM—BUILDING UP PATRONAGE.

But this is not all. The building up of a new transportation line, or a new method or system of transportation, is a tedious, difficult, and expensive matter, not only on account of the obstacles which must be overcome, but on account of the element of habit, usage, or business confidence which controls to so large an extent the course of trade. Every new enterprise suffers from this difficulty, but its continued success is finally rewarded by a degree of public confidence which we call the good will of the business and which in many cases is the most valuable part of the entire enterprise. We must bear in mind that the Missouri River, in a partially improved condition, was being navigated by a boat-line company. The Federal Government had not yet given us a 6-foot channel. On account of the shallow places in the stream, the size of the boats, and the size of the fleet, the extent to which the vessels could be loaded and the time consumed in the trip were all adjusted to the worst spots in the river. As the Government work progressed the service of the boat-line company became better and its patronage among the merchants grew. In the season of 1911 it moved only 1,084 tons of general merchandise. In the season of 1915 it moved over 33,000 tons of general merchandise.

That does not seem very great to these gentlemen that write magazine articles about the failure of the river improvements. But if they will read some letters of men who patronize those boats along the route they will have a different idea of it.

Here is a letter from a hardware company. It says:

Our tonnage for the past five years has been as follows: In 1911, 106,000 pounds; in 1912, 195,000 pounds; in 1913, 228,000 pounds; in 1914, 580,000 pounds; and in 1915, up to October 10, 912,000 pounds.

That is the way business grows.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman just gave his figures of the amount of freight in pounds. Did he mean pounds or tons?

Mr. BORLAND. In that case I meant pounds.

Scores of merchants came before the Rivers and Harbors Board at Kansas City and testified that they could not adjust their business nor take the risk of shipping by water in 1911 or 1912. Many of them did not attempt to do so in 1913 or 1914, but began in the season of 1915. Each year saw an increase in the patronage of the boat line as the service improved and as proper routings for freight and time of delivery were worked out. This good will of the business is not only the most valuable but the most delicate part of an enterprise. It takes time, patience, skill, work, and money to build it up, but it can be torn down by any blundering fool in an hour. Nobody knows better than the railroads that if they can get Congress to withhold appropriations for a single year every shipper who has patronized the boat line will be driven back into their arms. Any ambitious statesman who wants to run for President of the United States on a railroad platform should begin by a submarine attack upon the waterways.

DOES RIVER NAVIGATION PAY?

The boat line company now carries freight of all classes, including some of the most valuable merchandise, at a uniform rate of 80 per cent of the rail rate. In the first seasons of its existence it has necessarily faced a deficit. All new transportation lines do, and no railroad has ever been known to pay within the first nine years of its existence. The boat line has had the further expense and difficulty of operating upon a partially improved channel, so that it can not load its boats to full capacity, and has been frequently unable to accept all the freight offered to it. It also absorbs the switching charge at terminals at Kansas City and East St. Louis and the cost of loading and unloading. In addition to this it absorbs the marine insurance, so that the saving of 20 per cent is a net saving to the shipper. In spite of these handicaps, it will shortly be on a profit-making basis, and could now wipe out its deficit if it charged the same rate as the rail carriers. It can not increase its present fleet more rapidly than the improvement of the channel will justify, and therefore it is restricting its own earning power. For illustration, the maximum capacity of barges adapted to a 6-foot channel is 2,000 tons and the maximum power boat would be 1,000 to 1,200 horsepower. Craft such as these will produce a handsome profit at 80 per cent of the rail rate or even less. The company found, however, that with the numerous shallow places in the river it must use lighter draft boats. It began with 1,400-ton barges, and when it found that these could not be operated profitably until the river was further improved it built barges of smaller and smaller capacity. The small barges are operated at a proportionate higher cost, and when the channel is finally improved will be used only for way freight; therefore the company can not invest in full-size barges at this time nor can it tie up all its capital in small barges adapted only to the partially improved stream.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to say that just now the railroads are issuing embargoes against freight; they are unable to carry the commodities furnished them, and in some cities the waterways are unable to assist them, because they are unable to get the great terminals. Does this condition hold at all in the gentleman's country, and if his river was improved would it be of any more service to the people than it has been?

Mr. BORLAND. Unquestionably the gentleman from Pennsylvania is right. We are feeling the freight congestion, and I was about to touch on that. Not only are we feeling the freight congestion, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has issued a peremptory order that we must not hold railroad cars, that they are badly needed to haul the products, and that we must turn them loose at the earliest possible moment.

There was a time, I have no doubt, when the railroads of Missouri were overbuilt.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. HILL. The congestion in New England is due to political prosecutions on the part of the United States and the utter inability to raise funds to meet the situation, because $160,000,000 has been robbed from the people of New England by this prosecution.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I can not yield for the discussion of that important topic. There is some difference of opinion as to who did the robbing. But I do want to say that gentlemen who are saying that we ought to abandon the rivers and save the money we are spending upon these improvements are basing their contention on the fact that our railroad facilities are ample. They say: "What is the matter; what do you need any more facilities for? Have not you got the railroads?" It reminds me of a mayor in a sister city, who, when he was asked why he did not provide street lamps to light the streets, replied, "You got the moon yet, ain't it?" [Laughter.]

ARE RAILROAD FACILITIES AMPLE?

When our critics say, "Why do you need to spend so much time, work, and Government appropriations in building up river navigation? Have you not got the railroads?" We reply, Yes; we have the railroads, and we are attempting by constructive legislation to make them deal uniformly and fairly with the shipping public, and they are fighting back with both fists—their financial fist and their political fist. Even if the railroads were amply controlled and rates could be established arbitrarily by the Interstate Commerce Commission to please every shipper, regardless of natural conditions affecting the movement of freight, the improvement of the waterways would still be necessary and desirable. There was a time three decades ago in the history of the West when the railroads had built far in advance of the needs of commerce. In those days the railroads were engaged in cut-throat competition. To-day more stable rates have come, but the railroads are utterly unable to provide facilities for the increasing traffic. A system of railroad monopoly of transportation is a false and impractical system. It is as false as it is for the opponents of river improvement to claim that the business men who demand water transportation have no object in view but to bluff the railroads into reducing their rates. In 1871 when the Missouri Pacific was completed between Kansas City and St. Louis it had to be heavily subsidized because there was not sufficient commerce to justify its construction. To-day there are five lines of railroad between Kansas City and St. Louis, and some or all of them must soon be double-tracked. No man can foresee the tremendous growth in the movement of traffic in the interior of the United States. Nobody has ever overestimated it. The railroads to-day are suffering from periods of congestion, and there is almost an annual car shortage at the time of the movement of crops.

If anyone is interested in estimating the enormous growth of traffic in the Southwest, his attention is called to the fact that when Congress adopted the Missouri River project it did so on the basis of the official returns of 1907, which show that traffic passing through the gateway of Kansas City was approximately 5,000,000 tons, of which 1,000,000 tons would be available for transportation by water. In 1915 the total tonnage passing through the gateway of Kansas City was 11,000,000 tons, an increase of 120 per cent in eight years.

WILL WE SAVE MONEY BY ABANDONING THE RIVER.

Suppose we abandon the improvement of the Missouri River and waste the $6,000,000 we have expended on it, are we going to save the people of the United States the $13,000,000 necessary to complete the project? Is the improvement of waterways the only cost of transportation which is charged against the public? The public in some form pays for the capitalization of additional railroads. Those who take their position with the railroads against the rivers must demonstrate not only that ample railroad facilities can be provided, but that they can be provided at a less cost and with greater efficiency than the improvement of the rivers. Of course the very reverse is true. The Missouri River between Kansas City and St. Louis, with a permanent 6-foot channel enabling boats to make continuous trips and run day and night on regular schedules, has a carrying capacity probably equal to 100 single-track railroads, and yet it can be built to-day and maintained for a less cost than one additional single-track railroad between Kansas City and St. Louis. This is shown by a statement of the division of valuation of the Interstate Commerce Commission issued to WILLIAM P. BORLAND, October 27, 1915, which says that it will cost approximately $55,000 a mile to construct a modern single-track railroad from Kansas City to St. Louis. The distance is 280 miles, which makes a total cost of $15,400,000. To acquire the necessary terminals in Kansas City and St. Louis would cost at the very lowest estimate $5,750,000, making a total of $21,150,000. To maintain this road would cost $2,500 per mile per year, or a total of $6,500,000. Just compare these figures for a moment with the cost of having and maintaining an improved river between Kansas City and St. Louis. It will cost $20,000,000 to secure a 6-foot channel, of which about $6,250,000 has already been appropriated. It will cost $500,000 a year to maintain this channel. Our critics insist that we shall also add interest on the investment at the rate of $600,000 a year, making a total of $1,100,000 as the cost to the Government in maintaining a 6-foot channel. You will notice that the cost of maintaining a single-track railroad between Kansas City and St. Louis would be $6,500,000 a year, which does not include the item of interest on the investment. The original cost of the railroad is $21,150,000, or approximately the same as the original cost of the improved river.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. How much more traffic could the river carry than a single-track railroad?

Mr. BORLAND. It has been estimated that it will carry at least 100 times the capacity of a single-track railroad. Nobody knows. It is an expansive quantity. It adjusts itself entirely to the traffic offered. You can run as many boats on an improved stream as you have traffic offered. There is no limit as far as we know. There is no such thing as congestion at the terminals or otherwise on an improved river. You have all of the terminal facilities up and down stream that you need. You do not have to have your railroad yards blocked with cars which can not be switched onto tracks and unloaded.

IF GERMANY OWNED THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Which do you prefer, my patriots, who are so anxious to save the pocketbooks of the people, a railroad which must be clubbed into submission by an Interstate Commerce Commission and which is entitled to charge its full cost of operation to the shipper, or a free and open river, a public highway, with public terminals? If we regard the matter purely from the standpoint of preparedness, it is the height of national folly not to develop every available means of internal communication. Germany has built up the most remarkable military establishment the world has ever seen, and at the same time has improved her rivers, roads, and railroads. She has constructed magnificent canals and harbors. If Germany owned the Missouri River, there would be a different tale to tell. Much of our railroad stock originally was, and still is, in foreign hands. In the future it might happen that we would need every means of communication, need them free from private control, and need them brought to the highest state of efficiency.

TRAFFIC IS CREATED BY CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman has correctly stated that one argument of the opponents of river improvement is that we have the railroads to carry the traffic, and he has referred to the rivers as an additional instrumentality of transportation, and the coordination of water carriers with rail carriers through the construction of terminals. Is the gentleman prepared to state the additional advantage of the improvement of rivers and the establishment of water carriers by reason of the cheapened transportation as compared with carriage by rail?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, that is an important question, but one largely experimental. We know that business is created by the presence of cheap and reliable transportation. One gentleman came before the Rivers and Harbors Board at its hearing in Kansas City in October. He was a manufacturer in St. Louis of bathroom fixtures, enameled ware. He said that the opening of the river, he found, had enabled him to command a trade several hundred miles farther west than he had ever been able to command before; that he could go into territory by reason of the reduced rates on the river that he had never reached before, and he had enlarged his plant upon that proposition. Another gentleman, a man from New England, came before us who proposed to establish an apple-cider-vinegar factory at a small interior point in Missouri, on the river. He said that the continued improvement of the river and the running of boats was the sole condition of the investment of his capital; that he could not establish that plant there if it had not been for the facilities offered.

Another illustration is the alfalfa-meal business at Kansas City. Alfalfa is raised in the agricultural States of the West, ground into meal at Kansas City, and shipped to the South for dairy and stock feed. Other forms of stock feed are being manufactured at Kansas City, some of them using large quantities of molasses, which is brought via New Orleans. On account of the cheap and bulky character of this freight a water rate is absolutely necessary to build up the trade. Business under modern conditions is created by transportation facilities. It follows transportation facilities. It does not precede them.

EFFECT OF RIVER NAVIGATION UPON RAILROAD RATES.

As to whether the river traffic has now reached a point where its influence can be felt in competitive rail rates there is a wide difference of opinion between the shippers on the one hand and the railroads on the other. The shippers believe that viewed from the standpoint of experience in the practical effect of water competition on the Great Lakes with the rail haul from Chicago to New York a very substantial reduction of rates can be made between Kansas City and St. Louis. This will follow the increase in the volume of high-grade tonnage carried by river. The critical period is now approaching, and at this crisis it is seriously proposed to abandon the improvement of the river, put the boat line out of business, visit with discouragement and loss those who have invested their labor and capital in building up river traffic, and free the railroads from competition.

On the other hand, the railroads contend that the river traffic has already had and now has a very potent effect on rail rates; that the rates are now too low; and that with the elimination of water competition these rates will be promptly and substantially raised.

Both parties regard the presence or absence of water competition an important factor in the rate situation. This is evidenced by the statements and admissions of railroad men given in testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Here is what they say about it:

The rates between New Orleans and Kansas City are not normal rates, but are depressed by water competition on the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers.

But for the water route from New Orleans to Kansas City the rail rates on the commodities complained of would be a great deal higher than they are at present. If the present rates to Kansas City should be raised to a reasonable basis, thus ignoring the river navigation, it is my opinion that the same condition would obtain that existed prior to the present low rail rates. The traffic would be handled direct between New Orleans and Missouri River points by boats or barges, or by boats or barges to St. Louis, and thence via rail to destination, and this would mean that the initial lines at New Orleans would be deprived of handling this traffic.

That is what the railroads say.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. BORLAND. I was reading from the testimony given by a witness in an interstate-commerce case. The case is No. 6119. The name of the witness is Shephard, and he is assistant general freight agent of the Illinois Central Railroad and the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad.

KANSAS CITY A BREAKING POINT FOR RATES.

Mr. SMALL. Has the gentleman time for an interruption?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SMALL. I think it is generally conceded that the railroad fixes rates between water competitive points below the cost of carriage, so that the rates entail a loss upon the railroad as between water competitive points, and generally they recoup that loss by advancing the rates to interior points. That has created a prejudice upon the part of interior sections against the improvement of waterways, because, they say, the benefits are sectional. I ask the gentleman if he has considered the proposition whether it would not be wise to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix a minimum rate which the railroad may charge between water competitive points, so that whatever benefits are derived from water transportation shall inure to the benefit of the water carriers and to the sections immediately contiguous to the rivers, without penalizing thereby sections and points in the interior?

Mr. BORLAND. I will say in reply to the gentleman that that condition of which he speaks does not prevail in the territory west of Kansas City, for this reason: Kansas City is the breaking point for rates. If the rates between Kansas City and the Mississippi River are lowered, and that lowering is forced into a general readjustment of the rates, as we are now endeavoring to make it do, it necessarily operates for all the products west of the river, because Kansas City is the breaking point.

Mr. SMALL. You have just furnished evidence of the rate from water competitive points on the Missouri River, from an official here, below the cost of carriage, which was a loss to a railroad.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know that they are below the cost of carriage or a loss to the railway. I know they say if it were not for the presence of water competition the rates to New Orleans on molasses and sugar would be higher.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but I may have to ask for a minute or two more. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HARDY. Has not the objection which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] speaks of, which was very prevalent before the law of 1909, been largely eliminated by the law which passed this Congress in the year I speak of, which prohibits the carrier charging more for a short haul than a long haul?

Mr. BORLAND. I think it has had some effect in that direction.

WATER COMPETITION MUST BE CONTINUOUS AND SUBSTANTIAL, NOT MERELY POTENTIAL.

The growth of traffic on the river has been so rapid in the last five seasons that the railroad officials are beginning to consider a reduction of their rates to meet the water competition. Of course until the river carries a substantial amount of commerce and really becomes a permanent and substantial factor in the rate situation, the railroads are not going to meet the water rates. There are two reasons which will induce the railroads to maintain their rates as long as possible. The first reason is that the Missouri River is the key to the rate situation of the entire country south of the Great Lakes. Any reduction of through railroad rates to meet competition on the Missouri River would require a readjustment of rates to all interior points. The second reason is that the interstate-commerce law now provides that if the railroads lower their rates to meet water competition, they can not afterwards raise the rates without showing some other reason than the elimination of water competition.

The railroads are now watching the boat line so carefully that by examination of the files of case No. 6119 of the Interstate Commerce Commission docket it will be found that every railroad in the Southwest receives detailed reports of the cargo of every boat on the river, including the name of the consignor, the name of the consignee, and the point of origin and destination. On local points in the State of Missouri where the through rate is not affected the railroads have already reduced their rates to meet the boat-line competition. At this crisis, when water transportation is becoming a substantial factor, it is much easier for the railroads to cripple it and put it out of business by preventing appropriations in Congress for the continuation of the work. If they succeed even for a single year in causing an abandonment of the work, shippers whose whole commercial interests are at stake will be compelled to come back to the railroads and confidence in water transportation as a permanent factor will be destroyed. This is the bug under the chip of the whole waterway fight. Doubtless the railroad policy is a short-sighted one, and doubtless it would be better for them as well as for the country at large to recognize the waterways as a permanent addition to the transportation facilities of the country; but just now every railroad politician and railroad paper is busily shouting "pork" to frighten the advocates of river improvement, or "preparedness" to charm them away from a continuance of the waterway policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to have a little more.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed to proceed 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed to proceed 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EFFECT OF PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to trespass upon the time of the House, but I do want to explain the effect on the West of the construction of the Panama Canal. It is a thing to which gentlemen probably have not given much attention.

The rate situation in the Southwest is about to be violently disturbed by the opening of the Panama Canal. The ocean rate from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific seaboard will be cut in half, and this will affect rail rates in the territory east of the Alleghenies and west of the Sierra Nevadas; but the great interior section of the country between the Allegheny Mountains and the Rockies must pay proportionately higher rates unless the great inland waterways of the Mississippi Valley are improved so as to furnish an all-water route to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. This means that manufacturers desiring to enjoy the Pacific coast trade or foreign trade must move to the Atlantic seaboard or to the Gulf coast. They must abandon the Mississippi Valley with its great supply of raw material and fuel. This is a serious situation for every State west of the Alleghenies and means that the great Panama Canal, which was built at the expense of all of the people of the Nation, will prove a commercial blight to a very large section of our country unless it is supplemented by the improvement of inland waterways. The West, with its enormous supply of raw material and its inexhaustible fuel, can become the manufacturing center of the country if it be given adequate and cheap transportation.

MISSOURI RIVER A NATIONAL ASSET.

The Missouri River is the natural solution of this transportation problem. It runs through the great chain of eight States, which in the last decade have grown faster in farm wealth than any other eight States in the Union and that will grow faster. It runs through the great oil, gas, and coal belt of the world. We have the fuel, we have the labor, we have the climate, and we have the capital. But gentlemen say this is some kind of a sectional proposition. A lumber dealer who appeared before the engineer board at Kansas City said: "We can not buy Pacific-coast lumber in the Mississippi Valley if you do not give us the Missouri River. If the river is improved we can bring the lumber around through the Panama Canal and up by way of New Orleans, and up the Mississippi and the Missouri, and the people in Missouri and Kansas and Oklahoma can afford to buy the cheap lumber; but we can not transport a bulky freight like that if we have to pay an all-rail rate across the Rocky Mountains." So our friends on the Pacific coast are not so foreign to the proposition, and neither, I may say, are our friends on the Atlantic coast. In New England they do not raise the foodstuffs that feed their great manufacturing population. They can not. They have no means of raising it. Instead of sending to Canada to feed the operatives of New England, let them send to the Mississippi Valley. Let us send them the wheat, the flour, and the millstuff by water, down the Missouri, down the Mississippi, via the port of New Orleans, and then by the Gulf and the Atlantic Ocean around to the port of New York. And why not? We have built the great Soo Canal for the Great Lakes, and it has added to the farmers' price of every bushel of wheat far up into Canada, hundreds of miles north of the United States border. Canada has developed her wheat lands on the basis of our improvement of the Great Lakes. We in the Southwest have the same right to have our natural waterways built, to add to the price of our wheat, our cattle, our beef, and our cotton.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Does the gentleman think that at the port of New York we can take care of any more commerce coming by way of the Missouri River and the port of New Orleans unless we are able to get port improvements in New York Harbor?

Mr. BORLAND. Nobody is voting against port improvements in New York Harbor. New York is the greatest asset in a commercial way that the Nation has, and I have never yet voted against the improvement of New York Harbor. [Applause.] We own New York Harbor and we are glad of it.

TRIUMPHANT VINDICATION OF PROJECT.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Maj. Schulz, who was the engineer at the time this improvement was reported, recommended it. He was unqualifiedly in favor of it. He was removed and another man sent there, and this man made a report against it.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. That unfavorable report has been set aside by the Engineers' Board of Review.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Has the gentleman any idea why Maj. Schulz was removed from Kansas City?

Mr. BORLAND. No; but I have a notion. I know he was removed and another man was sent there, and on the 4th of March Senator Burton put in an amendment providing that there must be a reexamniation of the Missouri River; and, with great speed, on the 22d of April the reexamination had been made and the adverse report was in. We had to fight that adverse report. We got the Board of Army Engineers to come out there, and we so overwhelmed them with testimony as to the commercial use of the Missouri River that they came back here and yesterday joined in a report recommending that this Congress continue the work. [Applause.]

HEART OF AMERICA.

The Missouri River reaches into the very heart of America. It is the most important commercial artery of the country. It carries water navigation farther into the great producing and agricultural regions than any other channel. It is the breaking point for rates on east and west bound traffic. It is the key to the entire rate situation of agricultural States between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains. Its improvement will control the price of every bushel of wheat, every pound of beef, raised in that great bread basket of the world. No other country except China has so neglected its opportunities or so sacrificed its home interests to the demands of foreign capital. I have no prejudice against the railroads or against foreign capital which draws the income from them, but I know that we will need both the rivers and the railroads to meet the oncoming tide of American prosperity. This country is big enough, strong enough, and rich enough to protect itself and to build up its internal enterprises at the same time. [Applause.]

THE FARMER AND WAGE EARNER.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] has one hour in which to address the House. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. My colleague [Mr. DAVIS] has one hour, and in order that he may not be under restraint as to time I ask that he be allowed to proceed until he concludes his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. DAVIS] be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think that the gentleman from Texas, who is a valuable Member and will become a more valuable Member of the House, might as well learn at one time as another to comply with the ordinary provisions of the rules of the House. This is a permission which is practically never given, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, you will find the text for my remarks where God said:

Open thy mouth, judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy.

For, whether I discuss the question of preparedness or the question of rural credits, I shall endeavor to represent that great mass of humanity down in the common ranks, whom Abraham Lincoln said God must have loved because He made so many of them.

There are very grave issues pending in this Congress, and as I look upon the conditions of our country I say to the Democratic administration that the very life and destiny of the farmers of this Republic are now in your hands, knocking at the door not only for fair existence but for liberty itself.

When I was born this Republic had free land enough to make an empire twice as big as the great German Empire that is now battling the world with its prowess in arms. Now that land is gone; no longer can the farmer leave the crowded East and go to the inviting West, drive down his stakes, and add to civilization a new hope and a new home. Turning back we find 8,000,000 farmers, and 5,000,000 of them are tenants. I turn now to my Republican friends and say that is a terrific indictment against their administration, because the Republican Party has had charge of this Government during all of these years, with few intervals to the contrary, but there are some cobwebs that I want to brush away. When the Speaker announced the other day that I would address the House on preparedness and rural credits, he said, "and so forth." [Laughter.] I would like to know just what that "so forth" included. I jotted down a few thoughts that I will undertake to put in with the "so forth."

What is a reactionary Republican? In the parlance of the western farmer he is simply a hitching post in the body politic where the criminal rich ride up and hitch when they want to go in to scuttle the building. [Laughter.] What is a progressive Republican? It is a motherly hen sitting on a lot of rotten eggs expecting them to hatch, and the longer she sits the staler the eggs. [Laughter.]

When I came here I looked around this imposing pile of architectural beauty and display wondering what I would be able to do for the great family all over that grand State that voted for me to come here. What am I here for? [Laughter.] Then I heard a bunch of Republicans over there pretend to discuss the tariff. Three or four of them said the foreigner pays the tariff. Then, my God, I hung my head and wondered what they came here for. [Laughter.] The people who sent that kind here evidently made a mistake. They ought to have sent them to the asylum. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, if I thought there was a kinky-headed, black-faced, knock-kneed, pigeon-toed nigger in heathen Hottentot who did not know that the foreigner never pays the tariff I would be willing to head a petition to have Roosevelt go down and discover him as a new species of the biped family. [Laughter.] The foreigners pay the tariff. Phew!

I heard a speech yesterday from a Republican—I did not get his name and State, who in discussing the question of conservation, with an insolence pragmatic and, it seemed to me, vicious, said that he cared nothing about the next generation, that the next generation could take care of themselves. My God, sir, that is what has put us in the political hell where we are now, and you Republicans began that 40 years ago. All the great opportunities that God gave to man have been fastened in the clutches of the heartless, soulless, pitiless, conscienceless, cruel corporations that have no soul to damn under God's laws, no neck to break under human laws, and yet have all God's blessings monopolized.

I stand to beg and to plead for them who shall come in the future as well as for them who live now. God gave mankind dominion over the earth, the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea, and the beasts of the fields; and no generation of man has a right to monopolize, eat up, and drink up in riotous reveling wealth, the usufruct of the soil, and hand it down to posterity burdened with the former generations' sins and iniquities, loaded with misery, debt, death, and despair.

I have been a national character for 30 years. [Laughter.] I remember 20 years ago papers like the St. Louis Globe Democrat were cussing me by note, and my Republican friends if I put a blister plaster on you this afternoon it is not because I hate you, because I am like our much beloved Lord—"those whom I loveth I chasteneth."

When I was a boy there were lots of grand, patriotic men leading the Republican Party; but, say, it has been a long time since I was a boy. [Laughter.] I was born in the State of South Carolina, the State that threw the first bombarding shell in the face of the American eagle. My father moved to Texas when I was 4 years old, and out on the frontier of that frontier State I grew up just to suit myself. [Laughter.] Many, many nights the bosom of the earth rocked me to sleep. The broad canopy of a star-lit heaven covered me. The lowing herds, the twittering birds, the howling wolves, and the hooting owls were many times the only music of my civilization; and yet, born a slaveholder, in the very lap of that institution, with all of my people on the other side—all on earth I had went down in the emancipation proclamation, and my oldest brother lies in the ditches at Corinth where they buried the boys in gray—I have said a hundred times, and say it now, that I thank God devoutly that as grand and glorious a patriot as Abraham Lincoln lived in this country. [Applause.]

But say, when I want to compare Abraham Lincoln and his crowd to the modern Republican bosses and leaders I go down to the Washington Monument and let that represent Abraham Lincoln, and then stick up a toothpick by the side of it. [Laughter.] But they are not to blame. There is a reason. No political party that dominated any country on earth as long as they did ever was able to live over its own sins. Designing powers get hold of a party in power and seek to prostitute it to their base and ignoble service, and so the Republican Party today is dominated by the trusts and combines and conscienceless criminal corporations just like the slave power in the Whig and Democratic Parties dominated those parties before the war. That is history.

I was national political lecturer for the Farmers' Alliance for three years, and during that time I had more than a hundred leading Republicans on my cant-hook. In the pomp and splendor of their great monopoly in politics you could see the very Pharisees of old written in their face. They would march up with a pompous feeling and lay down their little almanacs and tablets of one sort and another.

Mr. BAILEY. And dream books?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Yes; and dream books, and then proceed to thank God that they were not as other men. You could see that their life was bound up in the fourteenth chapter of St. John. They would walk up to the front and say, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." [Laughter.] But, say, it is not that way now. Now they have a different tune. They start out now over in Psalms and cry out, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." "Judge me not according to the multitude of my sins, but in the bounties of Thy mercy." One reason I am so determinedly against the increase of the Army and the Navy is the experience we had several years ago when William McKinley, a patriot, led this Republic into a war for liberty, for justice, and the rights of humanity, when the conduct of Weyler in Cuba was so revolting that the whole heart of the Republic rose in a thrill and asked to dethrone that tyrant and give that country liberty. But before we got through Mark Hanna had charge of the program, and marched us across the world, shot the Monroe doctrine all to pieces, made it a mockery in the history of the world, marched on beyond Japan, stopped at the very door of China, and put the Philippine Islands in Uncle Sam's pocket—to extend trade! And since then there is no man who has respect for the rights of humanity that can boast about the Monroe doctrine in America without feeling a pang.

I am for the Monroe doctrine, but that doctrine does not reach around the world nor include military conquest and plunder. They said they took that country because they represented manifest destiny. They were still in partnership with God, you see. Well, I thought then, and I think now, that you might possibly convince me that Jehovah had been walking along the archways of infinitude for 6,000 years waiting for Mark Hanna to make Bill McKinley President and then go to the Philippine Islands with Mauser rifles and Gatling guns to shoot salvation into those fellows. But, my God, this next inquiry comes: If you went over there to shoot salvation into them and God Almighty sent the rifles and the Gatling guns, what part of manifest destiny was to be played when the next line of transports carried 65,000 barrels of liquor? I suppose God sent that along to "teach them the way of the Lord more perfectly."

Let me give you a picture of 500 speeches I have made in the last 20 years all over this Republic. Divide the human family, as God divides them, into three great classes. The industrial world I will put in the middle. The agricultural world on the right; the business and professional world on the left. Blackstone tells us that the distinction between civilization and barbarism is in the production and distribution of life's comforts called commerce. Get that down in your hearts. Savage and barbarous people produce and distribute nothing. Production and distribution make civilization. If you allow that business and professional class to stand between this industrial family and that agricultural family and go to the mint and get the money that controls production and distribution, it will not be long until you will have the producer, the farmer, and the great industrial world just where they are now. Twenty-seven millions of this industrial class have to beg, plead, and pray at the shrine of heartless, conscienceless, cold-blooded trusts for the privilege of earning their daily bread. Here is the great family of farmers producing under a chattel mortgage one-third of the cotton raised in this Republic. Out of our 8,000,000 farmers 5,000,000 of them are tenants, and no more free land.

Two-thirds of the corn, two-thirds of the wheat, and far more than two-thirds of the cotton raised by men who do not own the soil. If 50 years of Republican rule has put us in that shape when we had an unconquered world to start with, my God, what must be the crop of misery, poverty, and want in the next 50 years? There is no longer a new world to go to, and if civilization can not turn back and banish this crowd of corporation usurpers and stop its rapacity, and mark a proper limit on the ownership of God's opportunities, then this Republic will go down in reeking ruin through anarchy and despotism.

The Gary dinners alarm me. I heard our President talk about the patriotism of the great family of employers being willing for their employees to join the Army. If he meant such as met around that festive board in that millionaire carouse of the Steel Trust—the Gary dinner—may God pity our country.

Gold itself in mountains makes the very earth barren of everything except rocks and thorns and thistles. And so it does with mankind. It drives all the mercy out of men until they have piled up uncounted millions and have their "foundations laid," and then, realizing the blood, terror, devastation, and sorrow that they have caused, seeing the shadows of age and feeling the impending curse of an avenging God, impelled by cringing remorse, they hand out a lot of their ill-gotten dollars in the hope that this will serve as fire insurance against the flames of hell. [Laughter.] I was amused at the thought of their patriotism.

It is the same patriotism that the slave driver had when he put dogs on the trail of his escaping slave, trailed him up, lashed his body into lacerating and bleeding scars, and took him back to bondage. It is the same patriotism that the crocodile has when he steals up to the bank of a stream, takes its long tail and swishes its victim into the water, and then crunches his bones. It is the same patriotism that the wolf has for sheep.

Theirs is the patriotism of every tyrannical king on earth, intensified by inordinate greed. They, without one restraining virtue or love of humanity, have their very soul wound up inside the curves of a dollar mark, and, left to their own depravity, would recrucify Christ, stone the prophets, and outrage the virgins to prolong their sway. The common people to them are but a plate of oysters, ready for them to eat when they pour the seasoning on.

We must save this country by the great middle class, who have heart-throbbing love for humanity, with an impulse and a hope. The two extremes in society have never paved the way to civilization.

After all, the worst of every war is an aftermath of the bond sharks, the legalized lords of money, surveying the wreck and ruin wrought by themselves and their cohorts. They will administer on the nation's estates and hold a debt payable in gold, while they retire in ease and affluence and lay tribute on the treasure and toil of the millions who survive.

But amidst all this mad clamor for a large Army and Navy, when the war-mad maniacs are telling us that our Navy is absolutely worthless, that it is a collection of hulls and hulks and antiquated instruments, I turn to the late Mr. Witherspoon, a gentleman and a judge whom I knew for 20 years, who made the experts of the United States admit that—in every measurement that makes for efficiency, effectiveness, and power—our Navy is now equal to any country on earth except England; and if the $2,000,000,000 that this Republic has expended on the Army and Navy in the last 10 years have left us without any defense, my heavens, some of you Republican leaders and bosses should tell us who buncoed us.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT). Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Sure; I will yield for a question, but not for a stump speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I do not make them, like the gentleman does.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Thank you.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said a moment ago, I think perhaps, he would hurry along, or something of that kind. Would the gentleman like to have more time after his hour is up?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Thank you. I shall not want more time after the hour. I am much obliged.

Mr. MANN. I will offer the gentleman time.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Thank you. I would like to have known it before, because in that case I could have systematized my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has 10 minutes yet remaining.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Thank you, my friends. When I once get folded up it takes some time to get unfolded. I ask, Mr. Speaker, the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. In appearing to-day to plead for the farmer you will find my text where God said, "Open your mouth, judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and the needy."

The Democratic Party is committed to an asset currency and has given the commercial man and speculator an open and short-cut road to the mint, and bound by law to an almost limitless issue of currency to these classes at a nominal cost or rate of interest.

What our millions of patient and long-suffering farmers want, expect, and demand is that they, not as speculators or jugglers with commercial paper, but as life-savers, producers, whose toil has furnished food to make the flesh and blood of civilization, and whose produce clothes the living and shrouds the dead, be allowed to go to the mint and Treasury upon the same terms as the creditor classes.

The American farmer demands protection from competition with the reckless speculators and to be freed from the gripping greed of those whom the Comptroller of Currency says have charged 1,000 per cent. When statistics show over 1,000,000 farmers' wives and daughters in the fields, in the grim sweat and swelter, for less than 50 cents a day, it is wicked to hesitate and infamous not to give them relief.

The men who stand between the producer and consumer, holding a franchise to operate public functions, public utilities, and protected factories, have robbed both producer and consumer by law. They have robbed labor because it had no means of self-employment and was at their mercy. They robbed the producer because they control the money that buys, the factories that manufacture, and the transportation that hauls his produce. In this way they have extorted billions from a helpless people, and are now combined and combining to continue their spoliation by the support of a standing army.

If the Democratic Party gives the farmers a just law, then it will deserve and receive their unstinted praise as their redeemer, their Jesus; but if the party refuses, and gives them a stone when they ask for bread, then it will deserve and receive their execration, contempt, and scorn as their Judas.

A million women in the fields form the chain gang of this Republic, the industrial tragedy of the twentieth century. The very destiny of farm life is now in the hands of Congress.

Now, you Republicans, laugh.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. At what?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. At yourselves for causing all this misery. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I was elected on a platform pledging rural credit.

A national farmers' credit and home-loan association is now a national demand by all parties and by all patriots. Wall Street influences are trying to force a system through that will send the farmer to them after the money so they can plaster him with more debt and force him to continue to feed and feast them with his toil for the use of money. If the farmer can make Wall Street safe, he can make the Government safe. Why should the farmer not have the funds as cheap as the commercial banks? I want some honest man to tell me that the farmer should be outlawed and driven from the mint, and then have the mint grind out millions, yea, billions, for the commercial and creditor class, and force Mr. Farmer to go there for it, thus making him their legal peon. We have now adopted a plan of asset currency by which the creditor class may turn in their assets, notes, bonds, etc., and have the Government issue them paper dollars at cost, taking these bonds, notes, stocks, etc., as security. I will never die satisfied until I see the farmer have the same right.

In my opening speech, 200,000 of which were distributed, I said:

We must not consider society as now existing either normal or natural. We have been vitiated, bound down by ages of oppression and plunder, and have never been allowed to develop the good or the sublime in our race.

Mankind is a creature of environment; his conscience is a pupil in the school of contact, subject to the evil as well as the good influences, and money is the most absorbing thought in the human race, and a just and righteous system of currency will do more to tone and elevate life than all else; but our present system is a relic of modified barbarism coming down from feudal times, and our country is yet filled with Shylocks who demand their pound of flesh.

We should divide our currency system into three parts, one-third as now through the reserve banks on the commercial assets of the country; one-third to the States, counties, and cities on their bonds for internal improvement; and one-third to the farmer on solvent warehouse receipts and land notes in the purchase or improvement of homes. Some such measure would confer an immeasurable blessing on the American people and make our common country a paragon of beauty.

First. It would put one-third of our paper money into circulation to the workingmen at cost and set a premium on internal improvements without loading the country with debt and taxation to be absorbed by bond sharks and great corporations.

Second. It would solve the problem of good roads and make it easy to use electric motors (autos) for overland common traffic, and make rural life contented and prosperous.

Third. It would soon interlace the Great Lakes and rivers with canals, levee the main streams, divert and control the vast overflows, and prevent all that devastation of life and property.

Fourth. It would make paved streets, waterworks, and other internal improvements for the cities easy with money from the Government mints direct to them at cost.

Fifth. It would soon make our national conservation a glorious success. We could wicker the western world with canals, impound at the base of the mountains in reservoirs the millions of cubic yards of water that come down each spring in the snow melt and save it for irrigation. These artificial lakes would in a few years moisten and humidate the atmosphere and bring about bountiful rains in summer.

Sixth. It would make our Reclamation Service an untold blessing. We could drain our swamp lands, making useful millions of acres of the best lands on earth, destroy the malarial-insect pest and convert these vast regions into happy, healthy, and prosperous homes.

Last, but not least, it would enable us to erect schools, colleges, universities all over the country with paper money at cost direct from the mint, and free our schools from the humiliation of accepting charity and tainted money from the great corporations and their sinister trust masters. We, the people, would issue the money to ourselves and pay it back to ourselves at a low nominal interest through our Treasury at Washington with the reserve banks as fiscal agents, basing these issues on land, State, county, and city bonds, the best and most stable security on earth.

Against the people's rule in all ages aristocracy has carried the red flag of anarchy or the black flag of piracy. In this country our aristocracy is created through our corporate laws and systems. But its power, arrogance, extortion, and extravagance are more intolerable and oppressive than that of the aristocrat born. If their agents and emissaries rail at me as a demagogue, I am only paying the price that all men pay who dare to defend the oppressed against the oppressor.

I am not a pessimist. I believe the world is rapidly advancing. Our material, mental, and moral progress is wonderful. Many persons grow gloomy over what they call the increase of crime and the decay of our race. This is a fallacy. They fail to consider that modern means of communication and information make it possible to see the misdeeds of the whole world yesterday portrayed to-day. It is not news to tell that 90,000,000 of people in this country behaved yesterday, but it is news to tell of a few hundred who misbehaved. It is the abnormal, unnatural, or extra conduct of man we read of. When I contrast the material progress of man, I think of Abraham sending a message across the plains of Judea on a "jack," racking off 6 miles an hour as their rapid transit, and of Ahimaaz running on foot to report the capture of Absalom to David, and then think of the fact that at a small cost we can touch a keyboard and shoot a message around the world before Lot could have gotten a courier back to Sodom to tell of his wife's collapse into a dome of salt. When I want to contrast our moral advancement, I think of St. John two decades after Christ's crucifixion standing in exile on the isle of Patmos, a criminal under Roman law for preaching the glorious gospel of a risen Redeemer. The last living member of Christ's Apostles; all the rest had lost theirs heads or had been cruelly slain by orders of government.

Then I think of the fact to-day that in every government on earth we preach the Gospel with perfect freedom. When I think of the labor troubles of to-day and the sad plight of organized labor I call to mind that shortly over a century ago, when baronial and lordly aristocracy ruled England, to be a member of a trades-union was a felony. Now organized labor is the strongest power in all Europe, and, Mr. Edison says, will soon issue the decree that will disrobe every king on the Continent and stop every wheel in motion until another Magna Charta is signed. I say, God grant the day. These and a thousand things like these give me great consolation over present affairs and great hope for the future. They tell me in undying accent that justice and right can never be shackled and bound by law, and that truth crushed to earth will surely rise again. But we must not content ourselves with the present. The man that tells you to rest contented because you are better off than your ancestors is an enemy of progress and represents the rust of civilization. Onward and upward is the road that leads to the glory of God and the grandeur of man.

I am cheerful to admit that we are far in advance of our ancestors.

> But rank injustice still prevails,
> And fills the world with strife;
> We see its outrage everywhere,
> In all the walks of life.

The slave as a slave in the South was ten times better off than his ancestors were as savage cannibals in the jungles of Africa, yet this country was baptized in blood to make way for the God-given rights of man. Lazarus is better off to-day, not because he has his full measure of opportunity under the law of God and enjoys the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, but because Dives, the millionaire of 2,000 years ago, has become Morgan the billionaire of to-day and has more crumbs to drop from his table and more dogs to lick his sores. But if we continue to charter the natural blessings of our country into the hands of special privilege and allow them by law to concentrate and combine their wealth and power, ere long there will be a few thousand men like Dives and millions of men like Lazarus; then there will not be dogs enough to go around and lick their sores and soothe their pains.

> Then outraged man in sore despair
> Will rise in resentment everywhere,
> And a million men who can't get crumbs
> Will make complaint with dynamite bombs.

We live in a land that is blessed by nature beyond conception. All the natural elements that go to sustain a happy life are bounteous. The farmer is the greatest wealth producer in civilization, and blesses the world with his crop. It is his crop that goes to the outside world and brings its gold and keeps the balance of trade in favor of American commerce. For five generations the Republic has held for its people millions of free homes, yet with all of these natural blessings millions of our most industrious people are in the midst of despair. Every avenue of advancement foreclosed against them. Great corporations control our destiny; they have forced our people into layers and strata of life and forced them to submit to the rules, domination, and ravage of an aristocracy of wealth. They have covered the land with a corporation debt so intolerable that it will make serfs of our children—most of this ruinous and enslaving debt has been obtained by fraud, forgery, and usurpation. Their power over us is overwhelming. They control our money, the lifeblood of civilization. They control our great factories. They control our transportation both on land and sea. They stand guard over all our natural resources and forbid humanity to use them except at extortionate prices. They control the millions who toil in our mines, factories, railroads; and while piling up unmeasured millions for themselves they have driven the wage earner to the lowest living wage and have him helpless at the door of despair. They are by heartless methods denying his right to organize for self-protection. They control the farmer because they control the money and combines that buy his crop and the transportation that hauls it. Their agents and attorneys sit in the seats of the mighty, making the insidious and unjust decisions of to-day the precedent for to-morrow. They have built a political bastile into which they cram the common man and liberate the corporation and its venal manager. They infest our capitols like vultures to feast upon moral decay. They keep the best brains of our bar on their pay roll in princely salary to help them pillage the land by law. Covering the earth with a loathsome and scandalous debt running into billions, they now have these assets coined into cash through an asset currency. My friends, our great labor and producing masses cry for liberation. A bounteous yield from the farmers' field sends a thrill of joy through all the business world from the bootblack to the bondholder. Yet the great blessings he has wrought for humanity become a blight, a burden, and a curse to him. His richest harvests, his greatest crops, rise like a specter of despair to haunt him with the horror of more debt and more distress while some political pimp for plutocracy yells, "Overproduction!"

A few years ago young Rockefeller was born into an inheritance that if piled up in silver dollars would require a man working 10 hours a day to live a thousand years to count it. All this wealth, coming down to him through a law of entailment, perpetuity, and monopoly, in one of the greatest corporation trusts of the age, had so calloused the young man's soul that he was defending the trusts in a lecture to his Sunday school and illustrated the trusts in the business world as the American Beauty rose in the floral world, saying that most of the buds must be pinched off and let all the sap flow into one bud. A few days after that came out I made a speech in western Nebraska. I told the audience, though cold, cruel beyond measure, the logic of his simile was correct; that we could see all over this Republic the withered buds which had been pinched off; that 40,000 honest laborers then on strike for living wages and wholesome homes represented some of the withering buds; that 5,000,000 tenant farmers represented more of the buds that were withering; that the 20,000 workingmen's wives that a school board had said were going without breakfast each day in five of our great cities that their hard-working husbands might have meat for dinner and their children have dinner to take to school represented more of the withered buds; that the million working girls in our factories and sweatshops whom the vice commissions had said were working at such poor and paltry wages that after paying house rent, board, and laundry in a miserable existence thousands of them were forced in humility to sell their virtue for clothes, were a lot of the soft and tender buds that were being pinched off; that a hundred thousand tramps, vagrants, and outcasts were mostly the buds that had already withered and dried. Some one called out, "What about the dynamiters?" I answered, saying they were the buds with hard, stiff stems filled with thorns, and they lacerate the hand as they are pinched off. These are sad things to contemplate in a Christian land. The trusts and the Socialist Party present a serious situation and problem that must be solved. The trusts represent the despotism of our great corporations, a species of socialism led by greed and avarice for private gain, a method of collective ownership for private profit. It stifles all individual enterprises, chokes and strangles its rival, and, unrestrained, would soon make a few trusts own and control everything. This, the Socialists say, is proper, but the Government must be the trusts; that we must all work in common, own all things in common, making a heterogeneous mass of conflicting elements that, in my opinion, can never be brought in harmony; but we had as well look facts in the face. Two-thirds of our farmers are tenants now, and when they lose all hope of owning land they will vote for the Government to own it all and rent from the Government. More than two-thirds of our wage-workers must beg at the bar of some soulless trust or corporation for a place to earn their daily bread. In their helpless despair they are losing hope, and when they do they will vote for the Government to own all the means of production and distribution and force all to work for the Government. Debs, the leading Socialist, tells us the trust is an economic blessing and is here to stay, and should be owned and operated by the Government for the common good. Pierpont Morgan, king over all the regions of money and emperor over all the regions of rapacity, ordained by the Republican Party as general manager of this Republic, answered a Government inquiry, saying that the trust was here to stay, not, as Debs said, for public good, but for his good and others of his kind, and told the President of this glorious Republic that he could no more destroy the trusts than he could unscramble eggs.

I made a speech a few days after that in which I said that we might not be able to unscramble the eggs but we could see to it that Mr. Morgan, Rockefeller, and their kind should be allowed to put only a fair share of the eggs on their table after they were scrambled. Now, my friends, between the radicalism of Debs and the commercial cannibalism of Morgan there is a happy middle ground upon which stands the temple of liberty and where rest the highest attainments of civilization. The God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time. The right to life carries with it the God-given or natural means of life, and all monopoly of land and natural resources contravene the law of God and outrage the rights of man and must be abolished. The Commissioner of Corporations, one of the important officers in our Government and one whose business it is to know facts about corporations, in speaking at Atlantic City, sounded a serious note of warning to the American people. He said in the past 15 years 200 corporations have grown to such an extent that they own in assets $22,500,000,000—own three times as much property as the total wealth of this country 10 years prior to the Civil War. These 200 corporations, owned by a few thousand persons, have extorted enough to buy seven times as many slaves as were liberated by emancipation. They have ten times money enough to buy all the kings' estates of the earth. Their power to pillage is at least 1,000 times greater than the biggest slaveholder or the most ravenous king of history. And the voluptuous splendor in which they live has never been rivaled by the richest kings of earth. These lordly trust masters and their attorneys are the masters of our destiny. We fought seven years to free ourselves from the tyranny of King George. At Bunker Hill, Brandywine, and Yorktown our forefathers poured out their blood as an oblation to liberty under the inspiring battle cry that taxation without representation was tyranny, and yet each of these 200 corporations have taken from us more every year than King George did our forefathers in 50 years. To tamely submit to this rapine and plunder and then read the Declaration of Independence on July 4 and prate about our liberty is to make mockery of the sacred sacrifices our fathers made and prove ourselves the unworthy sons of noble sires. Do you wonder at the unrest among our millions of mortgage-ridden farmers and the ceaseless clamor of discontent among our half-paid rent-ridden wage earners? I know that among the "ruling classes" speeches like these are unpopular. Men dread to confess their wrongs even to their God, and aristocracy has always become indignant at its accusers.

Abraham Lincoln, when lecturing against slavery in 1854, was sneeringly referred to as the "baboon from Illinois." Ten years later the despised baboon was recognized as one of the world's greatest patriots and penned the proclamation that burst the shackles from 3,000,000 chattel slaves. Just before the patriot died he said that he feared for the future of his country more than ever before, even in the midst of war; said that as a result of the war an era of corporations had been enthroned and would prey upon the prejudices of the war and prolong their power until liberty would be lost. Every page of history verifies that direful prophecy. When the manager of a corporation can spend $3,000 on his wife's pet dog, and smug, strap, and brace it with the finest jewels, put it in a kennel amid satin, silk, and damask that cost more than the best farm home among 5,000,000 farmers, and turn then with stoic indifference to human rights and reduce the wages of 3,000 wage earners, many of them half-paid women and girls, liberty is already lost. When the owner of a great line of railroad can sidetrack every train of cars from New York to San Francisco and run his pedigreed dogs through on a special train, and then turn and issue $50,000,000 worth of bonds on the road and pocket the cash and tax the living and mortgage the unborn to pay these bonds, we have reached a point of intolerable shame where none but the servile sycophant or beneficiaries of the outrage could be expected to be silent.

When the manager and directors of a railway, a system of great highways which they hold in trust for public good and for their stockholders and honest creditors, go behind the screens and in flagrant violation of positive laws build a lot of side lines and taps, capitalize them at ten times their cost and value, and sell them to themselves for the parent company and thus filch the parent company, rob its stockholders and creditors, walk off with the loot, leave the whole system in bankruptcy with millions of fraudulent debts as a fixed charge against the people, to be paid in exorbitant freight rates, while the looters live in luxury, we have reached a stage in corporation depravity that would make the world's greatest pirates petty thieves and highway robbers respectable rascals in comparison. To send the common crap shooters to the calaboose and poker players to prison, and then put these high-toned malefactors in our parlor as honored guests is to invite the admiration of the devil and turn the glory of God into shame. God has said, "The love of money is the root of all evil." The money question is the most absorbing question in the human mind; next to his soul's salvation, with the average man it is the most vital. Whoever controls the money of a country controls its destiny, and if the people are to control this country and run the Government for their own good they must control the issue and distribution of money. This is fundamental. The world's statesmen seem to have never learned that production is limited to consumption and consumption is limited to the average income of the average man. A great majority of our people are mechanics, wage earners, and farmers, whose labor is confiscated by a pagan, brutal, and unscrupulous economic system and by an unjust, outrageous, tyrannical money system, which starves industry and gorges indolence, caresses the covetous and greedy, pampers the rich, pauperizes the wage earner, and makes the farmer a peon. Hence we have underconsumption everywhere.

One man and a machine to-day does more work, Mr. Edison says, than a hundred slaves did in 1860. But a corporation owns the machine, hires the man, controls and directs both to its own good; hence the great corporations own all the improvements of the age, fill their own tills with unmeasured piles of wealth, and if labor becomes disobedient and refractory they shut down the plant, get their palatial yacht or palace car and glide away to a health resort, while the worker starves to submission. Or they call for the militia and have him listen to the music of the Mauser rifle or gaze down the muzzle of a Gatling gun. Thus they are masters, and the ravage goes on. The farmer has been designated "the backbone of civilization." It is his toil largely that tinsels the flummery of the great corporations with fringe of gold and fills their pockets with millions, that keeps the common merchant from the bankrupt courts and the banker doing business. You have read of heroes on the field of battle, of deeds devoted and glorious in religion, but the most self-sacrificing member of civilization is the farmer's wife. The Government work is 8 hours a day, the common laborer puts in 10 hours and counts the click of the clock on extra time. But around 5,000,000 farmers' homes day by day there is a farmer's wife who has no time limit to her toil. She rises with the early dawn and starts her ceaseless toil.

She lives in nature's open life,
With nature's native grace;
She has given the earth her greatest men,
The noblest of our race.

Yet, how few of us stop to think what her lot in life really is. The farmer's plow stops on Sunday, but the farmer's wife—

Must cook, and scrub, and wash, and rub,
And make up beds, and sweep the floor,
Just as she did the week before.

Yes; even more, for while the Lords' Day brings a thrill of joy for her piously inclined heart, it also brings a vast amount of extra work; yet, God bless her, she gets to church on time and has an innocent "Virgin Mary" smile that marks her as a consecrated Christian. We often find her weary and faint, tired of the cooking and cleaning, washing and bleaching and ironing. Canning, pickling, and preserving add fuel to the flames that consume her. The thought of lakesides and seashores gives her a veritable headache of longing, but her despoilers enjoy these blessings. In the closing scenes of her life, dressed in raiment of righteousness she stands just this side of the jasper wall that separates us from the great beyond. The evening shadows fall thick and fast, glintings of a useful life glow in her countenance. The golden gates swing ajar and she is soon to leave this great groaning, greedy world. When her last lesson of life has been recited she sees the glimmer of a crown shining in the gloaming of eternity, and when the night shadows fall, too heavy for longer toil, the dear Lord giveth his beloved sleep.

In the name of 5,000,000 farmers' wives I plead for an honest system of rural credits.

It is a fundamental principle of Democracy (though now considered in some quarters as antiquated and shelf worn) that great military establishments are inimical to the peace of nations and dangerous to the liberties of the countries which maintain them. The war in Europe confirms it. With such a danger are we confronted unless the machinations of designing interests can be exposed and their schemes headed off.

The earlier lesson which the American people drew from the horrible conflict in Europe was the true one; it was, that when a country is converted into a military camp or its people are trained to arms the spirit of military aggression predominates and war inevitably ensues; that those who fall asleep under the tramp of soldiers and awake by the fife and drum may surely be expected to tire of the quiet ways of peace to become enamored of the so-called glory of war. But selfish and conscienceless interests, taking advantage of the excitement of the hour, have falsified our country's situation and, playing upon our fears, would hurry our Government upon a program of stupendous military preparation which no party in this country has heretofore been bold enough to espouse. Spurred on to unusual activity by the passion of gain and the worship of Mammon they, by hypocritical appeals to the national pride and hobgoblins of foreign invasion, would have us believe that our safety lies in following the unhappy nations of Europe, now at each others throats destroying millions of their best and bravest, while a few grow vastly rich by feeding the bloody spirit of war. "War profits"—these words are no longer strangers to the peoples of Europe, for at last they realize that there are those who gain by their country's miseries. Of the same brood are those in our own country who see in the present war hysteria a golden opportunity to make of this country an easy customer for their munitions of war and who use the cry of the national defense as a cloak for hiding the deformity of their scheme of restoring the infamy of Republican tariffs and of breaking the back of Democracy by overloading it with the burdens of defenseless taxation; who seek to strangle the program of the Democracy for an adequate merchant marine by substituting battleships for those of commerce; who, halting at an expenditure last year of $50,000,000 to acquire peaceful ships to carry our commerce to the world, do not flinch at the expenditure of a billion of dollars for the creation of a huge Army and Navy; who strive to shut off the vision of "a new freedom" and to close the door of hope to the common people; who would answer the cry of our farmers for the establishment of farm credits by giving them in lieu the burdens of war loans and multiplied taxes to support military contracts.

Are not the times portentous when general conscription for military service in time of peace is vigorously advocated? Is not the Democratic Party in peril if a great standing army is to be created and supported by stamp taxes? Is it not time for the people to awake when merciless Shylocks gather around a famous table to wine and dine a would-be Napoleon of America and to hatch schemes and lay plans to install their satraps in power through the overthrow of the Democratic Party? The snake has not been killed, it is only scotched.

The record of achievement of the present administration is one of which the honest, plain people of the country feel justly proud. It fearlessly entered upon the task of rescuing from the hands of political and financial marauders functions of the Government which the Republican Party through 40 years of misrule had surrendered to them. It made the law, in the language of Scripture, "a terror to evildoers." It wrenched the national currency out of the hands of a band of buccaneers who had been allowed to manipulate it in the interests of private greed to breed panics, to browbeat and bankrupt enterprises which dared to contest with theirs, to swallow up competition, to restrict credit here and extend it there, and for other unholy ends. It cut the pipe line which connected special banking interests with the National Treasury and placed credit where it of right belonged, namely, on the mobile resources of the country's enterprises. Let no one believe that this was accomplished without the resistance or resentment of those who were thus unhorsed, nor any vainly imagine that the interets whose special privileges have been subjected to the knife meekly submit or have in contemplation ever to support those who applied it. They seek to destroy the Democracy.

It is said that when the war in Europe shall have ended most of the world's free wealth will be found in this country. Do not be deceived; that little squad, who constitute less than a millionth part of the country's population, but control a tenth of all its wealth, when the crucial hour strikes, will again touch knees round that famous table at Judge Gary's and lay out the plans for making sure that not much of that wealth will reach the common man.

The administration has corrected the glaring injustices of a tariff constructed to enrich privileged pets, which extorted from the consumer a dollar where a dime found its way into the National Treasury. It is a well-conceived plan of the protected interests to join in the clamor for "preparedness," hoping that in the confusion of enormous expenditures they may undermine the work of this administration and bring about the restoration of the era of graft in which they once reveled. It is a fact of glaring significance that the most excited clamor for the national defense comes from those who are hotfoot in their endeavors for a restoration of Republican tariffs and Republican measures as the means of raising the revenue to foot the bills. It is not uncommon to find a subsidized paper, which rings the changes on the "national defense," in such a hurry that it can not take time to place in a separate paragraph its plea for the restoration of protection as the only means of furnishing the revenue. For when the President suggested that a share of the cost of an enlarged Army and Navy should be laid on the Steel Trust through taxing structural steel and pig iron the trust and its allies at once took fright and resurrected the "round table" of Wall Street and got ready to put the pile of their billions behind the old régime, remembering how docile and tractable the old régime was when it was in power. It did not hesitate to suspend the laws to help a friend or to use the iron hand to crush an insurgent. A hurried note from the White House to my "Dear Mr. Attorney General" held the laws of the Nation in suspense, and the Treasury Department held horses while the Steel Trust highwayed its last competitor.

A commercialized conscience is war mad—mad for great world power—and the millionaire magi of our country are holding conclaves and forming cabals to force upon the country a stupendous program of military preparedness, hoping to put in the White House a dictator to execute it. When the war in Europe is over the war barons who build battleships and supply arms, having exhausted poor, stricken Europe, will turn to fresh fields. Their evangelism of might is already launched in the countries of this hemisphere. They plan to arm and prepare one nation, and then, pointing to its preparedness as a menace and danger to the others, urge the others to counterprepare. Did not the ammunition makers thus play battledore and shuttlecock with the countries of Europe? Are American battleship builders and gun manufacturers to be permitted to arm and prepare foreign powers and then use that preparedness to frighten us into huge outlays? Much of the clamor for preparedness has a metallic ring.

When the hysteria of the hour is over, if the country has been saddled with huge burdens which now or hereafter involves military service by compulsion in time of peace, the creation of a great continental army, to be employed to stifle the cry of labor and to crush all opposition to a military government, those responsible need not expect the American farmer, laborer, and wealth producer to humbly kneel to have the load strapped on their backs.

All history teaches that when the wealth of a nation is gathered into the hands of a few the powers of government go with it, and that the measures employed to uphold the rule of a moneyed oligarchy embrace great armies to insure submission. Thus enthroned the few, as was said by Mr. Jefferson, "run rampant and roughshod over the plundered plowman and beggared yeoman." In the swollen coffers and mercenary designs of syndicated wealth lies the power to corrupt public opinion and debauch the electorate. These interests now own and control the electric wires that network the country and carry news. Their hands are already on the sources of information. Their power is next to supreme, and if the Democracy shall be wrecked the liberties which we enjoy will be at their sufferance. Give them an imperial army and navy, reinstate the Republican Party in power, and put a man at the head of the Nation of the restless ambitious spirit of Roosevelt, and we will have reached the beginning of the end of the rule of the people.

These war traffickers are lined up for a billion-dollar raid on the Treasury in the sacred name of national defense and carry on a systematic slander of our Army and Navy, stigmatizing it as "a thing out of date, impotent, and worthless as a power of defense." In the last 10 years we have spent something like $2,000,000,000 on the Army and Navy, a sum greater than that spent during the same period by Germany and Japan.

While men's imaginations are being excited with visions of invading armies, burning cities, tramping soldiers, fluttering flags, prancing horses, thundering battleships, belching cannon, screaming shot, and bursting shells—the pomp and splendor of war—we appeal to the sanity of the plain people and call upon them to stand steadfastly by the teachings of the founders of the Republic and the ancient landmarks of democracy.

The path of the President and of his administration during this last year of troublous times has been beset with dangers on every hand; these our enemies would increase; they are digging pitfalls for the Democratic administration and setting snares for it. They must not be permitted to defeat the hope of the people. With a fair working ship bill enacted into law and put into operation, giving to American exporters and to the products of the American producer reasonable rates for ocean transportation, and a farm-credits bill enacted and inaugurated, giving to the tillers of the soil—who, after all, are the great mudsills of society and civilization—credit based upon their resources and at rates which that great nonspeculative enterprise can afford to pay, the achievements of this administration will link the name of our chief with those of Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln, and so establish the Democratic Party in the confidence of the people that it will be safe against all assaults of predatory wealth. But we must not sit in the lap of the Republican Party while a great military machine is fastened upon us, for, when the system is established and the expenditures are voted as nonpartisan, the Republicans stand aside and refuse to join in supplying the funds unless we allow them to resurrect that old fraud of a protective tariff, the most indefensible measure that inordinate greed and commercial cunning have ever invented.

A Navy adequate to the country's defense is an established policy of our party; to any necessary increase of that armament we would offer no opposition, but the incomes of the rich, inheritances, and "war profits" should bear a just share of the cost and the load be lightened for the industrious poor.

Nations should never forget what God meant when he sent an envoy of angels from Heaven to shout the "Glory of God, peace on earth, good will among men" when he christened the Babe of Bethlehem the Son of God and the Saviour of man.

"The wages of sin is death" applies to nations the same as to individuals. The nations, now drunk on blood, rioting in ruinous war, are paying the death penalty because their sins have found them out. Given over to ravenous greed with a riotous aristocracy, living in luxury and lust, ruling in rapacity, making mockery of God's laws and a shameless sham of Christianity for ages, they are now reaping the harvest of their sowing. This devastating war is simply a climax, a dreadful drama of man's reign, of "man's inhumanity to man."

Fifteen millions of the best specimens of manhood in all Europe, who should be the fathers of the next generation, engaged in killing one another and pulling down the piers of civilization, but few of the common men in this work of destruction want to perform it or know its origin. These countries are in the hands of a score of individuals called rulers, kings, emperors, whose despotism degrades the race. Millions of the wretched poor watch the marching armies and wait for starvation. Common men are but mere tools for the rulers. Lovers of peace have been unable to control events because people do not control governments and operate them for public good.

This war may bring to the world such a demonstration of horror, stupidity, and awe that a mighty revulsion will make for universal peace. It may bring these kings with their ministers and chancellors to the world's bar of justice in universal judgment, convicted of the most heinous crime in history, and cost them their crowns, for which God be praised!

We find our country the produce center of the world, the greatest wealth-producing country on earth, yet my heart sinks when I see the massive piles of wealth in the hands of a privileged few who have held a franchise to fleece millions of men, and after having made them poor, ignorant, and sinful, in order to obtain, without their knowledge or consent, the products of their toil, these few, conscious of their own wrongs, now want to mesh our land with military barracks as a means of compelling submission to their further pillage.

A touch upon the heartstrings of my soul, and I hear the chimes respond:

O "dove of peace," where hast thou flown?
Is there no peace on earth?
Did the angels sing a false refrain
When they sang at our Savior's birth?
Will greed and gold forever rule
And fill the world with strife?
Is there no way to stay these wars
And reckless waste of life?
Shall gun thunders never cease
And dying millions moan,
While we feed the dogs of war
On human flesh and bone?
Then answering back from other shores
I heard the whisperings say:
We're now in the darkness that precedes
A glorious coming day;
When man shall take his murderous guns
And make of them, plowshares;
And loving God, be free from war
With all its toils and snares;
When men and women everywhere
Will love and trust each other;
And look to God as father of all
And all mankind as brother.

Mr. HARDWICK. I present a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of Georgia, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas we believe the people of the United States should never become a warlike people, yet John Hay was right when he said, "No chip on the shoulder, no swaggering before the world, but a firm stand, and deeds when deeds are necessary"; and

Whereas we feel a national pride in that wisdom and patriotism which have so marked President Woodrow Wilson as one of the greatest and safest statesmen in the history of our country; and

Whereas in the country's plans of preparedness for national defense, as stated by President Wilson, "We can and should profit in all that we do by the experience and example that have been made obvious to us by the military and naval events of the actual present," especially in the country of Germany; and

Whereas Germany has so notably employed her natural resources for national defense and especially in the example of her taking the nitrogen from the atmosphere not only to manufacture her needed explosives but also for the fertilization of her food crops, thus making her independent of her former supply of nitrates from Chile: Therefore, by this joint resolution, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Georgia:

(1) That we strongly approve and pledge ourselves to support those ideals and principles for practical and adequate preparedness so patriotically and wisely enunciated by President Wilson in his late speech before the Manhattan Club, of New York City.

(2) That any plans of preparedness for national defense which Congress may consider and finally adopt should include, so far as possible, the economic development of those natural resources of our country which will not only contribute to national defense in times of war, but to the Nation's prosperity and wealth in times of peace.

(3) Therefore we especially urge upon the Senators and Members of the lower House of Congress from the State of Georgia that they press upon the attention of President Wilson and Secretaries of War and Agriculture and urge upon the Naval and Military Committees and the Agricultural Committees of both Houses of Congress the serious consideration of the great water powers in the Chattahoochee River, the Coosa River, the Savannah and Ocmulgee Rivers, the Tallapoosa River, and notably at Mussel Shoals in the Tennessee River, which can be developed by the building of locks and dams, and not only improve the navigation of these streams, so long neglected and greatly needed, but also with these cheap water powers provide the Nation with its needed nitrates for explosives in times of war and provide the farmers with their needed nitrogen for the fertilization of their crops in times of peace.

(4) The economic importance of considering the utilization of these water powers in connection with the Nation's plans for national defense is measured by the important fact that this country has imported Chilean nitrates since the year 1867, to include 11 months of the fiscal year 1915, amounting in value to $261,990,054.86, and on these importations the manufacturing and farming interests of the United States, for the same period, paid an export duty to the country of Chile of approximately $90,000,000.

(5) That our armor-making plants; that our shipbuilding concerns; that our gunmaking plants and our powder-making factories, especially the production of nitrogen for powder making, should not be all closely concentrated in a narrow strip of country from 200 to 300 miles in length and extending on an average less than 100 miles in the interior of the country from the coast, as is now the case, from Connecticut to Virginia, and the Legislature of the State of Georgia respectfully declares that it is the duty of Congress in adopting any plan of preparedness for national defense to consider the economic development in other sections of the country, and especially in the South, where, in her navigable streams, are to be found water powers of the magnitude and cheapness that when developed will permit the largest use and scientific application of electricity through the electric furnace, which has contributed so wonderfully to Germany's national defense.

(6) That the governor of this State is hereby requested to select and name 15 representative citizens from the State of Georgia to visit Washington during the coming session of Congress and advocate the usefulness and efficiency of this joint resolution passed by the legislature of this State for economical and practical preparedness of this country for national defense.

Approved November 27, 1915.

The foregoing resolution, enacted by the General Assembly of Georgia, is signed by G. Ogden Persons, president State senate, and Wm. H. Burwell, speaker house of representatives, and approved by Gov. N. E. Harris, of the date above.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States would view with pleasure negotiations upon the part of the President with Central and South American countries to agree upon a day to be celebrated throughout the three Americas as Pan American Day, for the purpose of memorializing past international harmony and as a practical expression of the hope for its continuance in perpetuity.

INTERFERENCE WITH THE MAILS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 58), which was read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with full information showing to what extent the mails between the United States and neutral countries have been interfered with, held up, retained, or opened by Government censors of belligerent countries, and also whether any such interference has included registered letters. There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

[Telegram.]

OMAHA, NEBR., January 5, 1916.

Hon. GILBERT M. HITCHCOCK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Dyestuff situation becomes more dangerous every day and if relief does not come both from embargo by Great Britain on shipments of logwood dyes, as well as interference with shipment of coal-tar dyes from Germany, I think inside of 90 days there will be upward of 1,000,000 operatives in textile industry and in the manufacture of garments thrown out of employment. This does not take into consideration damage to commercial interests or the inconvenience from which the general public is already suffering.

THOMAS C. BYRNE.

Mr. JONES. I have a copy of the manifest of articles shipped on the Lusitania, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

CITIZENSHIP OF ENLISTED MEN OF THE NAVY.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a communication from Admiral Victor Blue in regard to the personnel of the Navy, which explains itself; also a communication from Mr. H. B. Joyce, of Seattle, Wash., which I sent to Admiral Blue and asked him to give me the facts in regard to the matter.

I think publicity should be given to these things, because there is widespread uneasiness throughout our country now in regard to our Navy's condition. Admiral Blue's letter will serve the good purpose of showing that the men behind the guns are all right, and I believe the ships are all right as far as they go. As chairman of the Naval Committee of the Senate I speak advisedly, I believe, in saying this. Our ships are as good as any in the world and I believe our sailors are as good as there are on any battle fleet now afloat.

I ask that Mr. Joyce's letter be read first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., December 11, 1915.

Hon. BENJ. F. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In view of the importance of the questions now before your honorable body, it seems that any information bearing on the subject would be valuable in arriving at a correct conclusion.

The inclosed matter, bearing on the condition of our maritime power, is offered as showing how well posted other nations are on conditions existing in this country.

An intimate acquaintance with maritime conditions on both the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, including Newfoundland and Canada, enables me to confirm the statements made in the inclosures herewith presented.

There is nothing more important in the whole question of national defense than the maritime situation in this country.

We must create a maritime population sufficient to supply trained citizen seamen and ships' officers to meet all requirements for naval and merchant-marine purposes.

To employ Asiatics or other cheaply paid alien mariners to the exclusion of citizens maritime classes will surely place this Nation in a position of naval helplessness similar to Russia in its war with Japan.

Wisely decided upon and liberally supported, a policy for national defense can be made perfect. We hope it will be done.

Respectfully, yours,

H. B. JOYCE,
1917 Ninth Avenue West, Seattle, Wash.

The London Financial News of July, 1903, contains the following:

"The full strength of the American Navy just now is, on paper, 32,000 men, but only 20,000 are actually enlisted, of whom a very large majority are alien born. The American warships having already too large a percentage of foreign material among their crews, which are made up in great part of sailors from foreign steamers and deserters from foreign warships attracted by the higher wages the United States Navy pays. The problem of manning the Navy is one of serious import to the naval chiefs. The personnel of men in the ocean fisheries of the New England coast dropped from 18,077 men in 1880 to 8,345 in 1900, of whom, be it remembered, 90 per cent are not American born."

A wide and varied experience on both coasts of America proves to me that the writer of the foregoing was well informed or had exceptional experience in connection with the subject mentioned. During all the 20 years mentioned, and for many years before, the British Government has been paying to its Royal Naval Reserves of the highest class $5 per month as service retaining fee, with extra wages for time spent in naval training at the training stations provided for the purpose.

In 1890, 137,000 men were enrolled in these Royal Naval Reserves of Great Britain, about 100,000 of whom were fishermen, the balance sailors, firemen, etc. This in 1890. All were enthusiastic in praise of the system. Their loyalty to the empire was unquestioned.

We quote further from the same article in the Financial News:

"Last year Canada had over 80,000 men engaged in her fishing industry, nearly all of whom are citizens.

"Newfoundland has some 60,000 men engaged in her fisheries, all of whom are citizens and seamen of the highest order. The fishing banks of Newfoundland are the best training ground for seamen in the world. Gloucester, Mass., it may be said, is the Grimsby of America, the seat of the American fishing industry in the North Atlantic, and the center from which the United States Navy expects to draw citizen recruits for its warships in the next maritime emergency; but, owing to the fact that nine-tenths of the men engaged in the fisheries are Newfoundlanders, Nova Scotians, Scandinavians, and other nationalities, the prospect of getting American citizens from this or any other source is regarded by competent authorities as very doubtful, the American warships having already too large a percentage of foreign material among their crews. Thus, while the tonnage of the American Navy has trebled in 20 years and the need for men has grown in proportion, the ocean fisheries have declined one-half, and Uncle Sam is decidedly worse off now than ever before as regards crewing his warships.

"Canada divides every year among her Atlantic coast fishermen the interest on $5,500,000 obtained from the United States in 1877 under an award for settlement of the fishery question.

"This bounty is a great assistance to the Canadian fishermen. The idea of a naval reserve being formed among them has always appealed very strongly to the statesmen of both countries.

The Admiralty began the experiment with Newfoundland and, it having turned out so well, Canada is about to follow this example."

During the period between 1813 and 1863 the United States paid a bounty to its codfisheries of the New England coast, in amount about $400,000, or the equivalent of $8 per man for each man yearly. This bounty was of immense value in building up the fishing and freighting trade of that period, but no action was taken toward training the men properly for naval service, so the object of the appropriation was largely missed; still the appropriation was a benefit far beyond its cost to the Nation.

Before the repeal of the bounty act of the United States, England had begun paying her naval reserves more than four times as much, an equivalent in that country greater than eight times as much on account of the difference in wages.

Since we have allowed our citizen seamen classes to be driven from the sea by our failure to properly support them and their places have been taken by men of other nations, we can now speculate on the efficiency of a navy manned by citizens of other countries or we must build up a class of citizen mariners equal to the citizen mariners of other nations by furnishing sufficient attraction for them to enter maritime pursuits and enroll themselves in the reserve forces from which the Nation can draw its necessary skilled seamen if it ever needs them. It can be done, and the volunteer seaman, with short terms of training, can be made a better all-round seaman and a far better citizen than one who has been hopelessly confined for four to eight years on a ship, with only short periods of liberty on shore during the time.

Unless we take some measure to meet the issue we may find our Navy in a condition of naval ineffectiveness similar to that of Russia in the Russo-Japanese conflict. Mariners need as much training to reach perfection in their industry as the machinist or the watchmaker.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 24th ultimo, inclosing a letter from Mr. H. B. Joyce, of Seattle, together with a memorandum in regard to foreigners in our Navy and in our merchant marine, is received. There is forwarded under separate cover my annual report. You will note, on page 31, tables giving all the statistics regarding citizenship of our enlisted men.

Ninety-five and forty-seven one-hundredths per cent of the total force are citizens of the United States. The remainder include mostly Filipinos and others of our insular possessions who are not eligible for citizenship in the United States, and a few Japanese and Chinese who entered the service years ago in the messman branch and who, under the law, are entitled to reenlistment.

The Navy has been Americanized by getting young men from the farms and from occupations not connected with the sea.

It is only too true that our merchant marine is filled up with foreigners, and had we depended on recruiting our men from the merchant marine we, too, would have foreign languages spoken on men-of-war, which is happily not the case.

I am sincerely glad that you are interested in Americanizing our merchant marine, for after all it is part of the national defense.

I am at present engaged in preparing recommendations which it is hoped will accomplish the purpose suggested in your letter. These will be placed before the Secretary in a few days, and if approved I will take up the matter with you and will be only too glad to furnish facts and figures.

The inclosed correspondence is herewith returned.

With best wishes of the season to you and yours, I am,

Very sincerely,

VICTOR BLUE.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

PERMANENT TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the National Monthly for January, a magazine edited by Hon. Norman E. Mack, former chairman of the Democratic national committee. It is on the subject of a permanent tariff commission.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMINENT DEMOCRATS FOR TARIFF COMMISSION.

[Editorial from National Monthly for January.]

Senator GORE'S recent speech in New York, delivered before a thousand representative business men of the metropolis, is a notably strong contribution to the steadily growing volume of Democratic opinion in favor of a nonpartisan tariff commission. Among other leading Democrats who do not hesitate to express themselves in behalf of taking the tariff out of politics by a nonpolitical tariff commission, a prominent place belongs to former Gov. Cox, of Ohio.

A train of thought suggested by Senator GORE'S address, and interviews and statements of Gov. Cox, is that one of the chief disadvantages of political systems of tariff making is the uncertainty to which they subject the business man, and with him the wage earner, the farmer, the public at large, whether considered in its aspects as buyer or seller, as producer or consumer.

A tariff into which partisan considerations enter in the process of establishing its schedules, may be good, may be bad, but whether good or bad, it suffers from the handicap that the community can never be sure what changes may be impending. That, under a political tariff, is so related to the flux and reflux of party success or defeat that business must inevitably seek to guide itself by guesses as to which party will be in power. This creates doubt, tension, anxiety, timidity, all of which are disastrous to business, and when business is on tenterhooks, that spells a general condition of apprehensiveness in the country.

One of the great arguments for the new currency law, and of paramount rank in the successes it has achieved, is the stability it has imparted to the national finances.

In banking, in circulation, the country knows just what it has to expect. This is a master preventive of depression and panic.

Precisely analogous to this function of the currency law, with its Federal reserve system as a remover of uncertainty, would be the uses of a nonpartisan tariff commission, established for adjustment of tariff questions, on wholly economic and scientific lines.

Such a commission would impart stability to the tariff subject and to action consequent on it. Therewith the nonpolitical tariff commission would in the inevitable order of things, stand as a barrier against depression and panic. By taking the tariff out of politics we should have, once and always, emancipation of business from reflecting the oscillations of politics.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 562. An act to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

FREIGHT EMBARGO IN NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution offered by me on day before yesterday may be laid before the Senate for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Montana, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 43), as follows:

Whereas it is a notorious fact that for weeks there has been a serious congestion of freight in the terminals and yards of all of the trunk-line railways entering the port of New York City; and

Whereas thousands of loaded freight cars have been standing in said yards and terminals and on sidings of said trunk-line railroads with great damage and injury to business men and shippers of the country, as well as to the railroads themselves; and

Whereas all or some of the leading trunk-line railroads have declared embargoes upon further shipments of freight into the port of New York; and

Whereas similar conditions are reported as to other ports, and the situation has become so serious as gravely to menace not only our foreign trade but the domestic trade of the country, manufacturing industries having difficulty in receiving supplies of needed raw materials on the one hand, and being unable to make prompt shipments of their finished product on the other; and

Whereas shippers throughout the country are suffering delays, inconvenience, and actual losses because of these conditions; and

Whereas it is asserted that the principal reason for such freight congestion and for such railroad embargoes is the lack of ships to carry on the foreign commerce of the United States; and

Whereas the ocean freight rates, even on such ships as are available, have increased since the outbreak of the European war from normal to as high as 1,500 per cent, thus imposing a serious handicap on the commerce of the United States, such ocean freight rates being so high as to preclude foreign commerce in certain articles of American production; and

Whereas American commerce is to-day dependent almost wholly upon ships of foreign registry; and

Whereas such ships are more or less under the control of their respective Governments, which, in turn, are quite naturally employing them primarily for the benefit of their interests, regardless of the rights and interests of American commerce; and

Whereas the situation has become so grave that it is imperative that all of the facts shall be developed in order that the problem may be fully understood and dealt with: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President of the Senate, with authority to investigate and report upon the existing freight blockade and embargoes on the trunk-line railroads entering the port of New York City and other ports where like conditions may be disclosed; the reasons for such blockade and embargoes; the effect of the same upon the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States; the extent to which the same is occasioned by a lack of ocean transportation facilities at and from such ports; the reasons for such insufficient shipping or ocean transportation facilities; the ocean freight rates now being charged as compared with the rates existing at the time of the outbreak of the European war in 1914; the extent to which discriminations are being practiced by shipowners and carriers as between American products and commodities, and the reasons therefor, and, generally, to investigate the shipping conditions as related to any and all of the ports of the United States and as between said ports and foreign countries. Said special committee is hereby given full power and authority to summon witnesses, to compel the production of books and papers, to employ counsel, and to take any and all steps that may be necessary to carry out and effectuate the purposes and objects of this resolution.

Said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is further authorized to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the subject pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expenses thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When the resolution of the Senator was read the day he submitted it, I was inclined to ask him, and I ask him now, why should not the investigation contemplated by the resolution be made by the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of, as is proposed, by a special committee of the Senate?

Mr. WALSH. It was my intention to consider that question, but I am pleased now to say that there are, to my mind, some good reasons why an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission would not be sufficiently comprehensive in its scope. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that the Interstate Commerce Commission is now conducting an investigation into certain aspects of the conditions to which the resolution makes reference.

Mr. President, I do not desire to say much touching the matters to which the resolution refers, except to call the attention of Senators in a rather specific way to the conditions that prevail. In a general way, they are known through newspaper reports to the country and to the Senate. Unfortunately, they seem to have taken on a character more or less permanent. Away back last spring, under date of March 9, the Washington Post had an editorial as follows:

A DEPLORABLE SITUATION FOR OUR EXPORT TRADE.

[The Washington Post, Tuesday, Mar. 9, 1915.]

Our docks and railway terminals at our Atlantic and Gulf ports are blocked with freights ready for export.

Three thousand cars of wheat at Jersey City terminals alone are awaiting cargo space upon the ocean.

Millions of dollars' worth of our agricultural products, millions of dollars' worth of outputs of our shops and factories, millions of dollars' worth of the products of our mills, our furnaces, and our mines, blockaded, embargoed, for lack of ocean vessels.

What an object lesson to the business men of the United States!

What an object lesson to the farmers, to the merchants, to the manufacturers, to the workingmen, to the entire population of this supposedly free and independent nation!

What a rebuke to the Republican and the Democratic Parties, which have promised the country its own merchant marine for the past 40 years, and both of them failed to provide it.

We are told that no mail may go to Europe for the next seven days.

We are told that no steamships will be available for a week to transport our shipments destined for western Europe.

We are waiting for vessels owned by our commercial competitors to move our commodities to foreign markets.

What a deplorable situation for the most powerful Republic of the globe.

And our legislators listen to the siren song of foreign shipping combines, and foreign financial interests, and the domestic representatives of these, and keep tight the shackles upon the growth and development of the foreign trade of the United States.

It is time that our people change all this.

It is time the business of this country be made independent of its foreign competitors for the markets of the world.

Canada has just established the service of a line of 18 steamships from Halifax to France.

New York, the shipping metropolis of the world, waits for British, French, and other foreign vessels to relieve it from freight congestion.

It is time for the people of the United States to demand that Congress legislate for them, and not for the financial, commercial, industrial, and shipping combines of Europe.

This question of an American merchant marine is a national question to be solved by and for the people of the United States.

It is not a question for foreign nations, for the domestic agents of foreign nations, for the representatives of foreign interests to advise in or to interfere with.

The United States needs its own merchant marine; it needs it now; it will need it every week, every month, every year of the future time, and no political party nor any political leader that opposes such marine can be regarded as pro-American in such action or such views.

I have good reason to believe that the conditions as outlined in this editorial even at the time that it was written were scarcely such as to justify in full the comment that was made, and whatever they were, they were thereafter and during the course of the summer much alleviated; but they have recurred in an exaggerated and more intensive form, while the situation does not seem to be relieved as readily as it was in the spring.

I send to the desk, and ask to have read, a dispatch appearing in the Post, under date of November 26, from New York, outlining the conditions as they prevailed some six weeks or two months ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK IN PERIL OF A BIG FOOD SHORTAGE AS RESULT OF WAR—AVALANCHE OF FREIGHT FOR EXPORT CAUSES SERIOUS LACK OF PROVISIONS—FIFTY THOUSAND CARS CHOKE YARDS—FIVE TIMES MORE SHIPS ARE NEEDED TO RELIEVE CONGESTION AT PIERS.

NEW YORK, November 26.

The land and water transportation routes leading into New York are facing the greatest freight congestion known in their history.

The situation is so serious that if New York should be visited with even so brief a blizzard as the one of the late winter of 1914 the city would come nearer to a food famine than it ever has before.

An avalanche of freight for export is pouring into New York's terminals and piers. Consequently, the supply of staple foodstuffs for local customers is at a low point.

The chief cause of this condition of affairs is the enormous growth of the export trade of the United States, on which has been piled up a growing domestic business that gives promise of outdoing all records.

When the United States undertook to furnish food, clothing, and military supplies to the governments of Europe at the outbreak of the war this country became something like a huge irrigating system, with New York as the dam and its docks as the sluiceways through which the waters of our commerce could be distributed into the subsidiary channels of ocean-going ships.

ALL SECTIONS SEND GOODS.
